TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE.

IN presenting this translation of the first volume of Badāonī's Muntakha'n-t-tawārikh (Selections from Histories) I cannot but be conscious of its many defects.

No one who has not attempted to translate from Persian into English can form the slightest idea of the special difficulties of the task.

The inherent differences of idiom in the two languages, the rich expansiveness of the one, and the rigid inflexibility of the other, render the attempt to fitly represent the glowing colours of Persian in the dull monotone of modern English, all but hopeless. It has been said that the test of a translation is not its literalness but its truth: that is to say, not its fidelity to the author's expression, but its response to his inspiration. It must not merely reproduce the letter, it must embody the spirit of the original composition.

How great is the demand thus made upon the translator must be evident to anyone who is acquainted with both Persian and English: and the difficulties which appear so formidable in prose translation, become insurmountable in the case of poetry.

The various metres of Persian poetry are so entirely characteristic and essential in their nature, that it has appeared to me futile; if not impertinent, to attempt similar metrical renderings in English.

Even where it is possible to reproduce by conjunction of English words, the rhythm and accent of any Persian metre, such a composition no more recalls the original, than does the skeleton of the anatomical museum summon up the living and breathing animal.

For this reason, the poetical portions of Badāonī's work have, in the present translation, almost without exception been rendered, not in verse but in prose, thus preserving the substance while sacrificing the form, as the transparent cube of salt may be crushed so as to be unrecognisable by its crystalline form, but still retains its chemical composition. To render poetry satisfactorily a translator must be both linguist and poet; if he be only a linguist he should not tamper with the finished work of the poet; he can, at best, only hope to outline the subject, leaving the colour-scheme untouched.

I am aware that a high authority* has expressed himself in favour of the translation of Persian poetry into English verse, but the qualifications which shall render a translator competent to undertake such a task must fall to the lot of very few.

With this full knowledge of the difficulties to be encountered, the present translation was undertaken, and it is presented in the confidence that those who are the best judges of the nature of the task will be the first to make allowances for defects in its performance.

3. Manuscript No. A. 44, also from the above library. This is referred to in the translation as MS. (B). The transcriber of this Manuscript is one Muḥammad Nāzim. It bears no date.

The printed text has been carefully collated with these two manuscripts, and all variant readings noted.

TRANSLATION

OF THE منتخب التواريخ OF AL-BADAXONI.¹

IN THE NAME OF GOD THE COMPASSIONATE, THE MERCIFUL.

Oh thou² from whose name spring all other names,
Kings at thy door are suppliant as I at theirs—
When once the impulse of zeal for thee was felt,
No foot remained shod, no head remained crowned.

Emperor of the world! with this unprofitable soul of mine which has become the abode of demons and wild beasts,³ in what way can I conceive thy praises, and with this worn and foolish tongue of mine, which has become as it were food for cats and dogs, how can I chant thy eulogy.

How can the miserable dust proclaim the Unity of God.
How in this state of defilement praise the Divine Being.

Moreover, the foot or search limps feebly in this unknown road, because of my constant anxiety and habitual fear, while in this limitless desert, my stammering tongue finds the sphere of speech always contracted.

That which my soul knows is but secondary,⁴ what my tongue speaks are but particles—(and therefore unintelligible).
How can I know thee in my soul or express thee with my

² This invocation is to the Almighty in whose name all literary works are commenced.

³ مَنَزَل دِيُو وَدَد شَدَّة.

2. This seems best, that I should restrain my pen from travelling in this valley, and having hidden the head of bewilderment in the cloke¹ of meditation on men and regions² should open the eye of my understanding to the knowledge of Thy all-perfect works and unfading kingdom, and proceeding, through the vicissitudes of affairs of created beings, to the Unity of thy exalted personality, should end with the world of proclaiming and confessing the Unity of God,³ so that I may see with the eye of certainty—nay more that I may recognize that and I have moistened my lips with the pure water of the praise of that chieftain whose name is "praised"⁵ whose end is lauded;

In thy excellence there is no room for duality,⁴ Thou and thy majesty make up the universe.

¹ ^{حَدُوثٌ} is of two kinds ^{حَدُوثٌ زَمَانِيٌّ} which is A thing's being preceded by non-existence, and ^{حَدُوثٌ ذَاتِيٌّ} which is A thing's being dependent upon another for its existence. Vide Lane, art. ^{حَدُوثٌ}. 1.

² ^{گَرِدَان} Lit. Collar or hood.

³ ^{سَنُرِيهِمْ آيَاتِنَا فِي الْآفَاقِ وَفِي أَنْفُسِهِمْ} Cf. Qurán xli. 53 ^{وَأَنفُسِي وَأَفَاقِي} we will show them our signs in the regions and in themselves.

⁴ The Unity of God is the fundamental proposition of the faith of Islám

⁵ ^{سُورَةُ الْاِخْلَاصِ - قُلْ هُوَ اللَّهُ أَحَدٌ اللَّهُ الصَّمَدُ لَمْ يَلِدْ وَلَمْ يُولَدْ وَلَمْ يَكُن لَّهُ}

^{كُفُوًا أَحَدٌ} Say. He is God alone. God the eternal. He begetteth not, nor is begotten—and there is none like unto him. Qurán—Súrat-ul-Ikh-lâs.

⁴ That is to say, no one can stand beside him in this position of excellence Cf. Qurán xxvii. 61.

⁵ ^{أَلَا إِلَهٌ مَعَ اللَّهِ بَلْ هُمْ قَوْمٌ يَعِدِلُونُ} Is there a God with God? Nay! but they are a people who make peers with him.

See also Súra vi. 1. Also the Súra quoted in note 3.

⁵ ^{مُحَمَّدٌ} Muḥammad—the literal meaning of which is "Praised." He was thus named by his grandfather 'Abdul-Muṭṭalib, who when desired to give the child a name after some member of the tribe of Quraish to which he belonged, said, "I wish that God who has created the child on earth may be glorified in heaven" and he called the child Muḥammad. Vide Hughes, Dictionary of Islám Art. "Muḥammad."

Lord of the promised fountain,¹ and of the praise which is on every tongue² (may the blessing and peace of God be upon him and his family) because the mantle of the honour of eternal and everlasting empire lies gracefully upon his noble figure, and the proclamation³ and stamp of undiminishing power and glorious sovereignty of right belongs to his exalted name.

of infidelity and the undergrowth of heresy from the plain of the kingdom of the sacred law.¹

3. After the praise of God and of the Lord the protector of the divine missive (may the blessing of God be upon him, his family and his companions, a blessing safe from all termination), we have to declare that the science of History is essentially a lofty science and an elegant branch of learning, because it is the fountain-head of the learning of the experienced, and the source of the experience of the learned and discriminating, and the writers of stories and biographies from the time of Adam to this present time in which we live, have completed reliable compositions and comprehensive works, and have proved the excellence thereof, by proofs and demonstrations, but it must not be supposed that the reading and study of this science—as certain lukewarm religionists, and the party of doubt and dissent, shortsighted as they are, are wont to affirm—has been or will be a cause of wandering from the straight path of the illustrious law of Muhammad (may the blessing and peace of God be upon him and his family), or become the entry into and way of ascent to the fountainheads of scepticism, and drinking places of defilement of the licentious and heretical, and those who have gone astray; because for a body of men who in the very essence of their constitution are devoid of any share in religious principle, the reading of the eternal word which is the key of evident happiness and “a healing and a mercy for the worlds,”² becomes a cause of misery

الشرع. The sacred law. Cf. Qurán v. 52 لِكُلِّ جَعَلْنَا مِنْكُمْ شَرْعَةً وَمَنْهَاجًا

For each one of you have we made a law and a pathway. The Mosaic law is always called التوراة At-Taurát (Hebrew תורה.)

The word in the text is always used for the sacred canon of the Qurán الشرع is divisible into five sections إعتقادات beliefs—آداب moralities—عبادات devotions معاملات transactions—عقوبات punishments. Cf. Kashsháf. Istí-láhát-ul-Funún, art شرع.—

² Qurán xvii. 84. وَنُنَزِّلُ مِنَ الْقُرْآنِ مَا هُوَ شَفَاءٌ وَرَحْمَةٌ لِّلْمُؤْمِنِينَ and and everlasting loss "and if they are not guided by it they say—

"this is an antiquated lie."¹

If this is the case with the Qurán² what chance has History?

"When any man has lost his hearing through melancholia,³
He cannot participate in the music of David and its harmony."

But I address my words to those who are endowed with the qualities of sound intellect and brilliancy of genius, and natural equity—not to those who are not led by the sacred law and who deny all principle, fundamental or derivative,⁴ because such men are not worthy of this discourse, nor are they within the pale of the wise, and discreet, and understanding, and how can one absolutely refuse to admit a science which is one-seventh of the 4.

¹ Qurán xlv. 10. In the original we read—^{فسيقولون} In both this and the former quotation there are verbal errors which lead to the conclusion that the author was not thoroughly at home in the Qurán.

² I have inserted these words as the only means of giving an adequate rendering of the phrase ^{قالبه ربح چه رسد}.

³ ^{مالبخوليا} ^{μελαγχολία}. The orthography of this word is ^{ماخوليا} Sadídi (الشرح فى الموجز) gives the etymology ^{الخلط الاسود} the black humour, but gives no hint of deafness as one of the symptoms of the disease. Deafness is not a concomitant of melancholia as known to modern medicine, but the cases of so called hysterical deafness with mental depression are not uncommon. The Bahr ul-Jawáhir says ^{انما يقال مالبخوليا لما كان حدوته عن} ^{السوداء غير محدقة وهو تغير الظنون والفكر عن المجري الطبيعى الى الفساد} ^{والخوف لمزاج سوداوي يوحش الروح} It is only called "^{málíkhulíá}" where it is the result of (the humour called) "^{Saudá}" (black bile) which is not inflammatory. It takes the ideas and thoughts out of their proper channel and tends to despondency and fear because of a melancholic temperament which depresses the mind.

⁴ ^{اصل ومزج} The two chief divisions of ^{علم الفقه} Jurisprudence. According to the Istílahát-ul-Funún ^{علم الفقه} treats of the soul and of all that appertains thereto, thus including all theological science; (Kashsháf Istílahátul-Funún art. ^{فقه}) cf. ^{الاشباه والنظائر} al Ashbáh wal Nazáir by Zainul Abidín ^{الفقه اشرف العلوم قدراً} bin Najím, (H. K. 774) ^{وامولته ثابتة وفروعه ثابتة}
i.e. Its fundamentals are firmly established and its derivatives evident.

seven sections ¹ upon which the foundation of the establishment of Faith and Certainty is laid.

"And all that we relate to thee of the tidings of the prophets with which we have established your hearts" ² tells us of this, and a large body of the learned expositors of the traditions and commentators on the Qurán, as for example Imám Bukhári ³ and Qází Baizáwí ⁴ up to our own times have occupied themselves in writing about this heart-enthalling science, and their words and practice have become an authority for the nations both East and West, in spite of the diversity of their origins and the distinction of their various degrees. While on the other hand an insignificant band of innovators and inventors who with the disgraceful partisanship of greedy mindedness and importunate desires, and shortsightedness as regards both outward and inward qualities, have placed their feet in the valley of audacity, and have introduced interpolations and errors into true and memorable histories, and having abandoned

مَثْنِي being plural of مَثْنِي repeating or reiterating. The number seven relates to the manzils or divisions of the Qurán each one of which is to be read so that the whole is completed in a week. See also Tafsír ul Baizáwí ⁵ q.

² Qurán xi. 121. This quotation is correctly given.

³ Háfiẓ Abú 'Abdullah Muḥammad ibn Abil Ḥasan Isma'íl ibn Ibráhím ibn-al-Mughair ibn-al-Aḥnaf Yezdibah, or Yezdezbah according to Ibn Máki'a a Maula of the tribe of Jáfí. (Slane Ibn Khalliqán, ii. 595.) The last named was a Magian and died in that religion, his son Al Mughairat embraced Islám.

He was the author of صحيح البخاري Saḥīḥ-ul-Bukhári, a collection of authentic traditions—in which an account of Imám Bukhári is given. He was born A.H. 194 and died A.H. 256, and was buried at the village of Khartang near Samargand leaving no male issue. The صحيح البخاري is held in great esteem by Muslims.

recognised constructions¹ and explanations, and interpretations of obvious nature, and estimating the conflicts and discussions of the noble companions and mighty followers (of the Prophet) by their own condition, attributed them to mutual contradiction and hatred, and to rivalry in the splendour and amount of their property and family, and having seduced simple minded people of elementary belief, have led them, by their own error and by attributing error to others, to Gehenna, the house of perdition.

"When the crow² becomes leader of a tribe, he will surely lead them along the path of destruction."

And if the eye of a man be instilled with the collyrium of the Divine guidance, and illuminated by the light of truth, and guarded from every calamity which happens in the world of existence and evil, he passes to the Unity of the Creator, the Ancient of days, the Glorious, freed from the stain of innovation, and purified from the blemish of change and alteration. And when I look carefully, I see that the world is itself an ancient archetype which has neither head nor root, its pages are a confused record, and in each page there is a list of the affairs of a section of mankind who have had the reins of the management of affairs entrusted to their hands. 5

This ancient Sháhnáma relates the affairs of the kings of the world.

Do thou always look and read therein with circumspection.

1 حَمَلَةٌ is the plural from حَمَلَ an inf. e.g. حَمَلَةُ أَحْسَنَ مَحْمِلٍ.

He put the best construction upon it, namely a saying (Lane, s.v. حَمَلَ).

2 عَرَابٌ The Arab proverb runs thus:

مَنْ يَكُونُ الْعَرَابُ لَهُ دَلِيلًا يَمُرُّهُ عَلَى جِيفِ الْكَلْبِ

"He who has the crow for a guide will be led by it to the carcasses of dogs."

The crow was considered as the most inauspicious thing on earth, thus the Arabs say أَشَامٌ مِنَ الْعَرَابِ More ill-omened than a crow.

Its appearance is thought to be ominous of separation, therefore they say also غَرَابُ الْبَيْنِ The raven (or crow) of separation.

The spell of this narrative brings sweet sleep to him
Who is in delirium, and has become distracted with madness of the brain.

But it also wakens him who on account of pride, has fallen into the slumber of carelessness and whom the devil has deceived.

And inasmuch as the invoker of blessing upon all mankind, 'Abdul Qádir ibn Ma'úq Sháh Badáoni (may God erase his name from the book of sins) in the beginning of the year 999¹

Khalífa of the time, the shadow of the Deity, Akbar Sháhí² when he had finished his selection from the History of Kashmír³ which, by the soul-inspiring order of that world-conquering Emperor whose throne is the heaven, one of the incomparable doctors of India had translated from the Hindí into Persian, yielded to a liking which he had for this science from youth to maturity, and as it was seldom that he had not been occupied in reading and writing it, either of his own free will and accord or in obedience to orders, it used often to occur to him to write as well an epitome of the affairs of the Emperors of the metropolis of Dehli, from the time of the commencement of Islám to the time of writing, in a concise manner,—

All the world is but a village that (city of Mecca) is the central point⁴ (of Islám).

might not be a book to be relied upon, or a notable composition, still in accordance with the saying —

“These ancient pages of the sky whose beauty the stars are, 6.
Are an ancient history of many Emperors whose armies excel the stars in number,”

it may be that from the perusal of this book a messenger from the world of spirits and invisible mysteries may cast a ray of light upon the receptive mind, and thus being a cause of abstraction and seclusion, may wean the soul from the love of this transitory world, and may aid the compiler of these pages in the prosecution of his task, and his hopes may not be blighted; and inasmuch as each day some new grief used to appear, and some vexatious annoyance used to shew itself, helps being few and hindrances many; moreover by reason of fresh toils and temporal changes it was difficult to remain in one place.

“Each day would bring a different place, each night a different roof.”

And besides all this, my sustenance was by no means assured, hanging as it were between heaven and earth, and my heart utterly distracted by separation from kindred and friends; accordingly that commission was only accomplished by fits and starts,¹ until a kind and complaisant man of wealth, orthodox and religiously disposed, and happily furnished with this world's goods, who was very devoted to me, and for whom I too entertained an indescribable affection, having completed the writing of the *Tārīkh-i Nizāmī*² which is a bulky volume, and which is here being completed by me—removed the furniture of life to the sublime abode of Paradise.

The history referred to in the text is one of great repute and authority, it was called by the author Tabaqát-i-Akbar-sháhi by which title Badáoni himself also styles the work. Its name is also known as Tabaqát.

"He has departed—I too follow him.

Each one at last must go the self same way."

At this juncture, when Time departing from its usual custom, has treated me in the matter of leisure with some sort of liberality, it has come about that I have been able to steal a morsel of the chequered¹ hours of my life from his grasp, so that I renewed my intention and confirmed my purpose, and on this ground that there is not bygone event which has not left something for the present.

From the author's preface in the text above it would appear that he had had the work in hand some considerable time, but had not been able to give his undivided attention to it until after the death of Nizāmu-d-dīn. In the space of a year from that event he had completed his abridgment so that, it must have been fairly far advanced at the time of Nizāmu-d-dīn's decease.

It commences with the reign of Muhammad Sáim, founder of the Ghori dynasty; the only known MS. terminates abruptly in the middle of the reign of Sultán Sayyid Muhammad. 852 A. H.—(1448 A. D.).

The name Nizamu-t-Tawarikh is generally restricted to the work by Baiẓawī (vide Elliott and Dowson II. pp. 252-253.) Its date is about 674 H. (1275 A. D.)

cousin and son-in-law of Hajjāj-ibn-Yūsuf Ṣaqfi,¹ who in the year, 93 A.H., (711 A.D.), conquered the countries of Sind, Multán and Gujráṭ, and, by the order of Walid ibn-'Abdul Malik Marwání² who on an important occasion wrote to him from Damascus and summoned him to his presence, starting from Oodypur in India, and wrapping himself in a raw hide, while on his journey yielded up his life to God, and after him the affairs of Islām in that ¹ Abū Muḥammad al-Hajjāj was son of Yūsuf-ibn al-Ḥakam ibn-'Uqail ibn-Masūd ibn Anmir ibn Miattib ibn Málík ibn Ka'b, ibn 'Amr ibn Sa'd ibn 'Auf ibn Qassí (called also Ṣaqif). He was governor of Irák and Khorásán for 'Abdul Malik ibn Marwán (692-705 A.D.) and was confirmed in that office by Walid ibn Abdul-Malik (705-715 A.D.) For an account of him see I. K. (Slane) I. 356 and seqq). He founded the city of Wásit between Basra and Kufa (75 A.H.) He died on 21st Ramaẓán A.H. 95, at the age of fifty-four and was buried at Wásit. Ibn Khalliqán states, "His malady was a cancer in the stomach for which he called in a physician, who, having examined into his case, tied a piece of meat to a string and passed it down his throat; after a lapse of some time he drew it out, and found a swarm of worms adhering to it: God gave also a cold ague power over him and although vases filled with lighted coals were placed around him so close as to scorch his skin he felt them not. (I.K. Slane loc. cit.).

He was a brutal ruler, and at his death it was said in thanksgiving "O my God! thou hast caused him to die: let his example also die from among us."

"The tribe of Ṣaqif was a great and well-known-tribe dwelling at Táif, who before their conversion to Islām were devoted to the special worship of the idol Lát; the founder of the tribe was Qássí (called also Ṣaqif) whose descent from Ma'áḍ is supported by two different genealogies." (Caussin de Perceval, Hist. des Arabes, i. 272). After refusing to hear the prophet in a personal appeal made to them, they made war against him, but eventually embraced Islām in 630 A.H., shortly after the return of Muḥammad to Medina.

The incident in the text relates to the vengeance taken for their father's death by the two virgin daughters of Rájá Dáhir, who were taken captive when he was killed at the siege of the fort of Ráwar, 93 A.H. Muḥammad Qásim had sent them to Baghdád under the charge of his negro slaves,

When they were summoned before the Khalifah Walid ibn-Abdul Malik, he became enamoured of them and desired to retain them. They however assured him that Muhammad Qásim had kept them with himself for three days before sending them to the Khalifah and that consequently they were not worthy to become his concubines. Walid being very indignant wrote a letter commanding Muhammad Qásim at whatever place he might have arrived when he received the mandate, to suffer himself to be sewn up in a raw hide and sent to the Capital. Muhammad Qásim received the letter at "Udháfar" (Oodypúr) obeyed its orders and was brought before the Khalifah dead.

The Khalifah taking a bunch of green myrtle in his hand, shewed the corpse to Dáhir's two daughters, who thereupon told him that they had falsely represented the facts in order to be revenged on the slayer of their father. They were accordingly by his order "enclosed between walls." (Elliott and Dowson, Vol. I, pp. 210, 211, Appendix 437, Ain-i-Akbari, Vol. II. 345, and footnote). Muhammad Qásim was succeeded in the sovereignty of Sind by the descendants of the Banú Tamím Ansári from whom it passed to the Sinurá Rájputs.

¹ "In A. H. 107 (A. D. 725-26) under the Khalifate of Hishám b-Abdul Malik Amín b-Abdallah Kashari, governor of Khurásán, conquered Ghor (Charjistán, the territory of Nimroz and Kábul, and made the latter his capital. From that time continuously under the dynasties of Umayyah and Abbás it was held by the governor of Khurásán until under the Sámánis, Alptigin, a slave of that house, withdrew from their obedience took possession of Ghazni and Kábul and asserted his independence. On his death Subuktigin, father of the great Mahmúd, succeeded to the kingdom and it continued under the house of Ghazni."

I have quoted this verbatim from Jarrett's translation of the Ain-i-Akbari Vol. II. p. 414, because it shews in a few words the changes which occurred during the period intervening between Muhammad Qásim and Subuktigin.

Nāsiru-d-din Subuktigin is affirmed by historians to have been a Turk by descent who was brought by a merchant as a boy to Bukhára where he was sold to Alptigin, who from being governor of Khurásán had by revolt against Manşúr (A. H. 351) established his sovereignty over Ghazni.

Subuktigin some fifteen years later married the daughter of Alptigin and was acknowledged king by the chief of Ghazni, Alptigin having died two years previously, during which period his son Abú Isháq was governor till his death. He then became founder of the Ghaznvide Dynasty or the Kings of Lahore. (See Briggs Ferishtá, Vol. I. pp. 11-96,) also (Elliott and Dowson, Vol. VI. 207-221.) came the seat of Government, so that Islám never again lost its hold on that country—accordingly I deemed it right to commence this history with an account of that monarch whose end was glorious, so that it may be fortunate from the first, and lauded at the last—and God is the best of helpers and defenders.

THE GHAZNAVIDE DYNASTY.

From Sultán Násiru-d-dín Subuktigin to Khusrau Malik, who, prior to the conquest of Dehli, proclaimed Islám in Hindustán, from the year 367 A.H. (977 A.D.), to the year 582 A.H. (1186 A.D.). Their sovereignty thus lasted two hundred and fifteen years under the sway of fifteen monarchs.

SULTÁN NÁSIRU-D-DÍN SUBUKTIGIN

Was of Turkí origin, the slave of Alptigin who was a servant of Amír Manşur-ibn-Núh Sámání.¹ In the year 367 H. after the death of Abú Isháq, the son of Alptigin, by common consent of the soldiery and populace he succeeded² to the imperial throne in the city of Bust³ and raised the standard of conquest, and

The Sámání dynasty was founded by Asad bin-Sémán. It held sway over Khurásán and Transoxiana, holding its court at Bukhárá—from 279 A. H. to 395 A. H. See Tabaqát-i-Násiri, Raverty pp. 26, 27 and 53. Amír Abul Hirş Manşur died at Bukhárá 366 A. H. and was succeeded by his son Abul Qásim-i-Núh. (Tabaqát-i-Násiri, Raverty 44.) For an account of the Sámání dynasty, see D'Herbelot III. 193. Abú Isháq was appointed by Mansur as governor of Ghaznín upon the death of his father Alptigin in the year 365 A. H., and died in 367 A. H.

According to the Tabaqát-i-Násiri, Alptigin died in 352 A. H. and Isháq in 355 A. H. upon the death of Isháq Balkatigin, the slave of Alptigin succeeded him, dying in 362 A. H. after him again Pírey obtained the government, but was deposed in 367 A. H. when the Government passed to Subuktigin. (See Raverty, Tabaqát-i-Násiri, pp. 71-73.)

girding up the loins of energy and effort for foray and religious war, he invaded Hindustán on the frontiers of the country of Koh-i-Júd¹ and having fought a severe battle with Jaipál who was the ruler of Hindustán, concluded peace with him. Jaipál, however, broke the treaty. Accordingly Násiru-d-dín Subuktigín equipped an army composed of 10,000 cavalry and numberless elephants huge as mountains, and engaged in conflict with him a second time, fought a great battle with him in the neighbourhood of Lamghánát,² the breeze of victory stirred the banners of Amír Násiru-d-dín, the army of Jaipál suffered defeat, and he himself took to flight and sought refuge in Hindustán. Thus Lamghánát came into the possession of Amír Násiru-d-dín, the Khutbah was read and the coin struck in his name.³ Then he proceeded to the assistance of Amír Núh-ibn-Manşúr Sámání⁴ and was the means of procuring notable victories in Khurásán and the regions beyond the river.⁵ Finally in the month of Sha'bán⁶ of the year 387 A.H. (997 A.D.), he obediently submitted to the summons of the Almighty, having reigned for twenty years.

⁶ The eighth month of the Muhammadan year.

- responded "Here am I," he appointed his young son Isma'il as his successor.¹ When this news reached Maḥmūd who was the elder son of Subuktigin, he wrote a letter of condolence to his brother and sought a peaceful solution of the difficulty on the following terms: That Isma'il should give up Ghaznīn to Maḥmūd, receiving in its stead the governorship of Balkh: Isma'il refused these terms, and eventually war was declared between the brothers. Maḥmūd was victorious, and after defeating Isma'il, kept him closely besieged in Ghaznīn for a space of six months, at the expiration of which time certain of their friends intervened and made peace between them. Isma'il then came and had an interview with Maḥmūd, and the sovereignty devolved upon Yamīnu-d-Daulat Maḥmūd. After this a quarrel arose between Maḥmūd and Maṣṣūr ibn-Nūḥ Sāmānī and also his brother 'Abdu-l-Malik ibn-Nūḥ.² Eventually Maḥmūd got the upper hand. The Amīrs, of 'Abdu-l-Malik also, Fáiq and Baktūzūn, who engaged in contest with Maḥmūd, were defeated by him, and the sovereignty of the whole of Khurāsān, of Ghaznīn, and the frontiers of Hindustān came into the hands of Maḥmūd.

Maḥmūd's mother was the daughter of the ruler of Zābul³

² The origin of this quarrel is stated by Ferishta to have been a protest lodged by Maḥmūd against the nomination of Bak-Tūzūn to the governorship of Khurāsān (see Briggs, p. 84, see also Raverty, Tabaqāt-i-Nāsiri, pp. 49, 50).

Maṣṣūr was deprived of his sight after dethronement by Fáiq and Bak-tūzūn who then by agreement with Maḥmūd were to hold Merv and Nishāpūr.

Shortly after this (in 388 A. H.), the Sāmānī dynasty came to an end after the defeat of Abd-ul-Malik by Ilāk-i-Nasr. It had lasted one hundred and eight years. See Raverty, pp. 53, 54. (see also D. Herbelot iii. 194).

Maḥmūd is related to have assumed the title of Sulṭān and to have been the first Oriental potentate who appropriated this term (Thomas, Coins of Kings of Ghaznī, J. R. A. S. IX. 270. see also Elliott II. 480-481).

³ She was the daughter of Alptagin, governor of Ghaznīn, which is here meant by Zābul, the words 'that is Qandahār' only occur in one copy and are probably interpolated.

[that is to say Qandahár*] accordingly, he is called Mahmúd Zábulí—as Firdausi¹ says:

The auspicious court of Mahmúd Zábulí is an ocean,
An ocean such that no shore can be found for it:
I went to the ocean—I dived but found no pearl
The fault is my fortune's—not that of the ocean.

In the early part of his reign he had some unpleasant correspondence with the Khalifah of Baghdád Al-Qádir billáhi 'Abbási.² Eventually the Khalif despatched a magnificent robe of honour, and many presents of precious things and gems, and conferred on him the title of Amíru-l-Millat Yaminu-d-Daulat.

Leaving Ghaznín he went to Balkh and Herát, and in 387 A.H., (997 A.D.) he returned to Ghaznín after having settled those provinces, and thence made repeated incursions and forays into Hindustán, and took several fortresses. 'Asjadí³ composed the following qaṣida in honour of this expedition:

When the king of kings marched to Somnát⁴
He made his own deeds the standard of miracles.

In the month of Shawwál, 391 A.H., (1000 A.D.) Mahmúd returned to Hindustán from Ghaznín with ten thousand cavalry, 11.

² Al-Qádir billáhi Abul 'Abbás Ahmad ibn-Ishák ibn il Muqtadir was born in 386 A.H. His Khalífate lasted from 381 A. H. to 422, the year of his death, a period of forty-one years. As Suyúṭi quoting from Al-Khatib says that he was distinguished for his rectitude and nobility of character. (History of Caliphs (Jarrett, p. 431.)

The qaṣida in which the lines quoted occur is given at length in the Majma'ul Fuṣahá, loc. cit. MS. (A) quotes them wrongly, MS. (B) is the same as the text which reads  for . 'Asjadí was a celebrated poet of Merv. The Tabaqát-i-Násiri gives another couplet in addition to the above and attributes the poem to 'Ansuri (p. 82, note 1).

⁴ Somnát. Situated according to the Qánún in 97° 10' long. and 22° 15' lat. Somnát is on the shore, in the land of pirates which is part of India. Ibn-Said says that travellers often speak of it, and it forms part of Guzerát or the country of Lar. (See Bayley, History of Gujerat, p. 18, etc., Ain-i-Akbari Vol. II. (Jarrett) 246; etc. Abul Feda II. ii. 116.)

and reduced Pesháwar. He also again drew up his forces on these frontiers for battle with Jaipál who confronted him with large forces of cavalry and infantry and three hundred elephants. Sultán Maḥmúd gained the day and Jaipál was taken prisoner together with fifteen of his relatives, his brothers and his sons; and five thousand infidels fell by the sword. Great spoils fell into the hands of the Gházis, among them a pearl necklet which was on the neck of Jaipál, which was worth some hundred and eighty thousand dinárs,¹ and the necklets of the others too, on the same

There is some uncertainty as to the actual value of the Dínár, as there were different coins, one of silver and the other of gold bearing this name—

It was during the Khalifate of Abdul Malik ibn Marwán (A.H. 73 to A.H. 86, A.D. 692 A.D. 705) that a separate coinage was introduced. Thus As Suyúfí gives the following account: "Yahyá-b-Bakayr narrates:— 'I heard Málík say that the first who coined dinárs was Abdul Malik and he inscribed on them a verse of the Qurán. Mnsa'b states that Abdul Malik inscribed on the dínár "Say, God is One." (Qur. xii.) and on the reverse "there is no God but God;" and its circumference was a rim of silver and he inscribed outside the rim, "Muhammad is the Apostle of God, whom he hath sent as a guide unto Salvation and the true faith.'" (Jarrett, History of the Caliphs p. 222.)

Abdul Malik had introduced the custom of writing at the head of letters the formula, "say there is one God" This was a cause of offence to the Grecian Emperor who wrote saying that unless Abdul Malik abandoned this habit "there will reach you on our dinárs the mention of what you will not like." Abdul Malik consequently decided upon coining his own dinárs which he did in the year 75 A.H. (A.D. 694.)

The origin of the word dínár is attributed to the Latin denarius the words فلس fuls and درهم dirham being in the same way derived from folles and drachma. (Prinsep I. 19-246.)

The denarius, a silver coin was worth approximately 8½ d. its average weight being according to the authorities 60 grains. It was first coined B.C. 269.

Its relation to the drachma was at first as 8·5 to 9·75, but owing to a falling off in weight of the drachma they at one time were practically equal in value. The drachma was a silver coin and occupied among the Greeks the place of the denarius among the Romans. Both these coins then, the dínár and the dirham, were silver originally, and were in all probability of equal values, but there is another dínár mentioned in the Rájá Taranginí and elsewhere which was a gold coin—this answers almost exactly to the Roman denarius aureus of which Pliny speaks, the average weight of which was 120 grains. The gold coins of Chandragupta mentioned in the Sanchi inscription weigh from 120 to 130 grains and are indubitably copied from Greek originals in device as well as in weight. Prinsep I; 246.

scale. This victory was won on Saturday,¹ the 8th of Muḥarram, 392 H., (1001 A.D.) Leaving this place Maḥmūd proceeded to the fortress of Tabarhindah² which was the residence³ of Jaipāl, and conquered that country.

After this in the month of Muḥarram 393 A.H. he left Ghaznīn and proceeded to Hindustān by way of Seistān and assaulted Bhātīa⁴ which is in the vicinity of Multān. The Rājā of that place, Bejī Rāi, fearing the punishment of the Sultān killed himself with a dagger, and they brought his head to the Sultān. Many Hindūs, more than one can number, were hurried along the road to non-existence by the pitiless sword, and Maḥmūd took as spoil two-hundred and seventy elephants while Dā'ūd ibn-Naṣr⁵ the renegade ruler of Multān, being reduced to submission by the Sultān, agreed to pay twenty times twenty thousand *dirhams*⁶ annual tribute.

We may thus take it that the golden dīnār was double the weight of the silver dīnār and taking the ratio of gold to silver as 10 to 1 this would give us the relative values of the gold and silver dīnār in terms of dīnārs of silver as 20 to 1.

This relative value is rendered more probable still by a comparison of our author's statement of the tribute paid by Dāud ibn Naṣr (page 11, line 18 of the Text) with that of Firishṭa (see note 6 below).

Against this however is the statement in the Ain-i-Akbari (Blochmann I. p. 36) that "the Dīnār is a gold coin weighing one miqdāl, i.e., 1½ dirhams" but as both the dirham and the miqdāl were variable the accuracy of this statement is open to question.

See Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. (Art.) Denarius.

² Tabarhindah. Firishṭa calls this Batindah which is also the name given to Jaipāl's capital in a history of the Rājās of Jamū. As to the identity of this with Waihind, see Raverty's Tabaqāt-i-Akbari, pp. 76-80 footnote; see Tioffenthaler's map, Vol. III. See also E. and D. II. 438.

³ MS. (A) has جای بودن. Text has مقرر which is evidently an "improvement" on the author.

⁴ MS. (A) has بهاتہ Bhātā. MS. (B) has بهاتہ Bhātā. The real name of this place is according to Elliott Bhera, which lies on the left bank of the Jhelum under the Salt Range—see E and D., Vol. II., Appendix, pp. 439-440.

⁶ Firishṭa says 20,000 golden dirams. According to the Ain-i-Akbari, Vol. I. 35, the dirham is a silver coin, and no mention is made of a golden dirham. Taking the value of the golden dirham at twenty times that of the silver dirham the text would give the same amount as that given by Firishṭa (see note 1 p. 18).

12. Multán by way of Hindustán.¹ Those events occurred in 396 A.H. (1005 A.D.) In the following year 397 A.H. (1006 A.D.) a battle was fought at Balkh between Mahmúd and Ilak Khán² king of Máwará an-Nahr.³ Sultán Mahmúd was victorious; Ilak Khán finally died in the year 403 H. (1012 A.D.)

In the year 398 H. (1007 A.D.) Mahmúd entered Turkistán, and having settled the affairs of the Turkís, pursued Súkhpal⁴ Nabsa, Rájá of Sind (who having embraced Islám had been released from his captivity to Abú 'Alí Sinjári but had again joined the idolators and apostates) overcame him and threw him into prison where he died.

In the year 399 A.H. (1008 A.D.) Mahmúd a second time entered Hindustán and engaging in battle with the aforesaid Anand Pál defeated him, and betaking himself with his vast spoil to the fortress of Bhímnagar⁵—which nowadays is known ¹ Firishta says by way of Batindan. In the text we find by way of Hindustán and MSS. (A) and (B) have the same. According to Elliott (II. 438) we should here read Bihand or Waihind, a place of considerable importance on the western bank of the Indus about fifteen miles above Attock.

³ Transoxiána.

⁵ This fortress is situated about a mile from the town of Bhím. The fort itself was called Nagarkot (Firishta) and is the same as Kot Kangra. In Tieffenthaler's map Nagarkote is placed some 25 miles N. W. of Kot Kangra, but at page 107, Vol. I, he says, "Côtgangra nommée aussi Nagar cott est une ville munie d'une forteresse et située dans les montagnes." See E and D, Vol. II. 34 and App. 445.

"The Town of Bhím which is about a mile from the fort, is now on a spot called Bhawan which means a temple raised to a Sakti or female deity, and Bhím is probably a mistake arising from its presumed foundation by the heroic Bhím."

as the Thána of Bhím—reduced it by promising quarter to the garrison, and gained possession of the treasure and valuables which had been buried and stored there since the time of Bhím, and in the early part of the year 400 H. he caused several golden and silver thrones to be placed in his court, and ordered that all that boundless and incomputable wealth should be scattered at the foot of his own throne that the people might gaze on it. In the year 401 H. (1010 A.D.) he left Ghaznín and again marched towards Multán, and took possession of the remainder of the country and put to death the greater part of the Karmatians¹ and heretics of that region, and sent the remainder whom he did not put to death to the fort,² where they died. He took Dáúd ibn Nasr, the heretic ruler of Multán, to Ghaznín and kept him a prisoner in the fortress of Ghori,³ where he died.

In the year 402 H. (1011 A.D.), he set out for Thánesar⁴ and Jaipál, the son of the former Jaipál, offered him a present of fifty elephants and much treasure. The Sultán, however, was not to be deterred from his purpose; so refused to accept his present, and seeing Thánesar empty he sacked it and destroyed its idol temples, and took away to Ghaznín, the idol known as Chakar- 13.

Tieffenthaler describes it as a large and populous town one mile in length, having a pond surrounded by buildings towards the east. The Hindus he states, claim that when gold is thrown into this lake it increases in weight. He naively, goes on to say, however, "Mais c'est un fable ridicule car celui qui y jette son or n'en recouvre rien." The water is accounted holy.

He places Thánesar at a distance of 66 miles from Dehli giving the stages,—Narela 12 miles, Sonpat 6, Panipat 12, Carnal 14, Asamabad 7, Thaneswar 9. It lies N.-W. of Dehli and is now called Thaneswar. See Cunningham, Anc. Geog. of India, pp. 330-332. See Alberuni, I. 199.

sām,¹ on account of which the Hindús had been ruined; and having placed it in his court, caused it to be trampled under foot by the people. In the year 403 H. (1012 A.D.), he conquered Gharjistán,² and in the selfsame year an ambassador arrived from the ruler of Egypt, and when the Sultán heard that he was of the Bâtíní sect,³ he exposed him to public ridicule⁴ and expelled him.

In the year 404 H. (1013 A.D.), he prepared an expeditionary force to attack Nandana,⁵ a city situated on the mountains of Bálnáth. Jaipál II⁶ left a force to defend that fortress, and himself proceeded to the Kashmir pass. The Sultán gained possession of that fortress with promise of quarter, and left Sárágh Kotwál to defend it, while he pursued Jaipál. He took the vast spoils of that mountainous region and put many infidels to death by the sword of holy war, and honoured the rest by admitting them to Islám—a certain number he led captive to Ghaznín.

In the year 406 H. (1015 A.D.), he contemplated the conquest of Kashmir, and besieged the fortress of Lohar Kot,⁷ which was a very high fort, but was forced to abandon the siege on account of the severity of the cold and rain, and the constant reinforcements available to the Kashmiris, and returned to Ghaznín. In that year he entered into a contract for the marriage of his sister with Abul Abbás ibn Mámún Khwárazm Sháh,¹ and sent her to Khwárazm.

In the year 407 H. (1016 A.D.), a band of ruffians murdered Khwárazm Sháh, and Mahmúd leaving Ghaznín, proceeded first to Balkh and thence to Khwárazm, where a furious battle took place between his forces and those of Khamártásh, the commander-in-chief of Khwárazm. The Sultán's forces gained the day and Mahmúd appointed Altún Tásh governor of that country, investing him with the title of Khwárazm Sháh, he also took vengeance on the murderers of Khwárazm Sháh, and returned (to Ghaznín) after having arranged those important affairs.

In the year 409 H., he marched with the object of subduing Qanauj,² and having crossed the seven³ dangerous rivers of Hindustán, upon his arrival in the neighbourhood of Qanauj, Kúrah,⁴ the ruler of Qanauj, offered his submission, and sued for quarter, offering presents. Leaving that place he arrived at the fortress of Barnah¹ whose governor Barwat, having entrusted the defence of the fortress to his kinsfolk, retired into seclusion.

The garrison of the fort not being able to withstand Maḥmūd's assault sent a present of a lakh and fifty thousand² rupees, with thirty elephants, and thus obtained quarter. From thence Maḥmūd proceeded to the fortress of Mahāwun³ on the banks of the river Jon,⁴ where the governor of the fort named Kal Chandar⁵ attempted to escape by crossing the river riding on an elephant, but in the meantime the troops of the Sultān arrived, and he destroyed himself by stabbing himself with a dagger—

From thence he went to Mathra⁶ which is a place of worship of the infidels, and the birth place of Kishan, the son of Basudev, whom the Hindus worship as a divinity—where there are idol temples without number, and took it without any contest, and rased it to the ground. Great wealth and booty fell into the hands of the Muslims, among the rest they broke up by the orders of the Sultān, a golden idol, the weight of which was ninety-eight thousand three hundred *misqāls*¹ of refined gold and a piece of sapphire² whose weight was four hundred and fifty misqāls: besides a celebrated elephant of huge size, like a mountain, belonging to Rájá Gobind Chand, one of the Rájás of Hindustán, which the Sultán had long earnestly sought to buy, but which was not to be had. By chance one night, when they were returning, this elephant broke loose and came into the Sultán's camp without a keeper. The Sultán was greatly pleased with its capture, and gave it the name of Khudádád.³ When the spoil reached Ghaznín it was found to amount to over twenty million and fifty-three thousand dirams, and three hundred and fifty odd elephants.⁴

In the year 410 H. (1019 A.D.), Mahmúd* again turned his footsteps towards Hindustán and encountered and fought on the banks of the river Jon with Nandá the Rája of Kálinjar,⁵ who و چون بغزنین رسید شمار آن غنائم بیست و اند بار هزار هزار درم و پنجاه و سه هزار برده و سیصد و پنجاه و اند فیل بود.

Both MSS. have بوده but we must read برده as in Firishta, Vol. I. p. 51, line 9, et seq. we read thus:—

and when he reached Ghaznín they counted the spoils of the expedition to Qanauj, twenty thousand dinārs and thousands of thousands of dirams, and fifty thousand slaves and 350 elephants, besides other booty in addition to these. (Firishta, Vol. I. p. 51, l. 9 et seq.).

⁵ Kālinjar in Dangaya, Bundelkhand. A description of this fortress with two plates will be found in Tieffenthaler, Vol. I. p. 244. He states that the fort was taken by Sher Sháh and passed into the possession of the Rajah of Dangaya (Bundelkhand) from the time of Muhammad, king of Delhi. (1718 to 1748). Lat. 25 N. Long. 85° 5 E. 16. had with him 36,000 cavalry and 45,000¹ infantry and 640 elephants, and who had put to death the Rájá of Qanauj on the occasion of his submission to the Sultán, and who had also come to the help of Jaipál, who had several times fled from before the Sultán. The servants of the Sultán who had gone forward to the attack, found the city deserted, and sacked it. A terrible dread overwhelmed the heart of Jaipál, so that leaving all his property and material of war just as they stood, he took to flight with some selected companies. Five hundred and eighty elephants during the pursuit, emerging from a forest, fell into the hands of the Sultán's troops. He then returned to Ghaznín.—Many regions passed from the possession of the infidels to the Muslims, moreover the people of that country, either willingly or perforce, made profession of Islám.

In the year 412 H. (1021 A.D.), Máhmud proceeded to Kashmír and laid siege to the fort of Loharkot for a month, but it held out being exceedingly well fortified. Leaving Loharkot he went to Lahore, and in the beginning of spring returned to Ghaznín.

In the year 413 H. (1022 A.D.), he again made an attempt on the country of Nandá, and when he arrived at the fortress of Gwáliár, having reduced it peaceably and accepted presents from its governor, confirmed him in his governorship. As part of that present there were thirty-five elephants. Leaving that place he went to the fort of Kálinjar, the commander of which first made an offering of three hundred elephants and sought his protection.²

He also composed a poem in Hindí in praise of the Sultán, and sent it to him, whereupon the Sultán read the poem in the presence of the eloquent men of Hindustán and the poets of his own country. They were all loud in their praises of the poem, and the Sultán was so proud of it, that he wrote a patent conferring upon him the governorship of fifteen forts as a reward for the poem. Nandá also sent large quantities of property and jewels.

Firishta gives the date of this expedition as 412 A.H. See Elliot, Vol. I. 462, for an account of the various statements.

¹ The text has صد و پنجاه و پنج هزار Firishta says 45,000. MS. (A) likewise says 45,000. MS. (B) is same as the text, which says 145,000, but 45,000 is no doubt correct.

In the year 414 H. They held great banquets and gave presents to each other, and 'Alī Tagīn, of whose oppression the people of the regions beyond the river had complained, learning what was happening took to flight. The Sultān pursued him and having captured him sent him a prisoner to one of the fortresses of Hindustān, then he returned and spent the winter in Ghaznīn.

3 The accounts of this celebrated expedition are given in great detail by most authors. Those who follow (Ibn Aḡir and) Mirkhond make it commence with 416 H. Those who follow Firishṭa with 415 H. (Elliott, II. 468).

The river Sarsuti falls into the sea at the distance of a bowshot east of Somanath (Alb, 261). It was here that the Yādavas killed each other (Alb, 405).

The idol of Somanāth is stated by Alberuni to have been the linga of Mahadeva erected to remove the leprosy of the moon. The word Somanāth means master of the moon. "The image was destroyed by the Prince Mahmūd, may God be merciful to him!—A. H. 416." Alb. II. 103. Alberuni gives an account here of Somanāth, and states (p. 176) that the day of full moon in the month Śrávāna is a fast day holy to Somanāth.

Qazwīnī in his Aḡār-ul-Bildā gives an account of the idol of Somnāt and states that it was suspended in mid-air without support of any kind, and

- mans who worship a large idol. There are many golden idols there. Although certain historians have called this idol Manát, and say that it is the identical idol which the Arab idolators brought to the coasts of Hindustán in the time of the Lord of the Missive (may the blessing and peace of God be upon him), this story has no foundation, because the Brahmans of India firmly believe that this idol has been in that place since the time of Kishan, that is to say four thousand years and a fraction. Its name too, in the Hindi language, is really Sobha Nāth, that is to say Lord of Beauty, and not Manát.¹ The reason for this mistake must surely be the resemblance in name, and nothing else. In this expedition, having taken the city of Patan² which is known as Naharwāla, a city of Gujerát, and having obtained a great supply of provisions from thence, he arrived at Somnát where the garrison closed the gates of the fort against him, and reaped their reward in rapine and plunder. The fort was taken and Maḥmūd broke the idol in fragments and sent it to Ghaznín, where it was placed at the door of the Jāmi' Masjid and trodden under foot³.

² Pattan. Tieffenthaler I. 385, states that Pattan was a very ancient city founded even before Guzerát, 20 miles from Radhanpur, 40 miles north of Guzerát. Its ancient name was Nehroála. It was originally called Anhalpur. See Ab-i-Akbari (J) II. 262, III. 59, 60. Compare Briggs' Firishta, I., 69., &c., Anhalwára (Elphinstone).

⁴ Firishta calls this Rájá Brahma Dev, and states that having fled from Maḥmūd he shut himself up in the fort of Gandaba (Kandama Dárkh-i-Alfi). Briggs states that the position of this place has not been ascertained, but it appears to me to be the place Canda mentioned by Tieffenthaler I. 402. "Canda est une bonne forteresse à 40 milles de Somnath elle est entourée d'eau comme une île : mais on peut y aborder à gué en quelques endroits." This description tallies exactly with Firishta's that there can be little

In that year Al Qādir billāhi² the Khālīfah, despatched a flag with a letter appointing the Sultān³ to the Governorship of Khurāsān and Hindustān, Nīmroz and Khwārazm, and conferred titles of honour upon his brothers and sons, and in the same way assigned the titles of Kahfu-d-Daulat wal Islām to the Sultān, and to his elder son Amīr Mas'ūd that of Shāhābu-d-Daulat wa Jamālu-l-Millat, and to Amīr Muḥammad his younger brother that of Jalālu-d-Daulat, and to Amīr Yūsuf that of 'Aẓdu-d-Daulat—and so forth.

In this year by way of punishing the Jats⁴ of the vicinity of Multān, who had committed many acts of disrespect, Maḥmūd brought an army to Multān—and four thousand (some say eight thousand) boats belonging to the Jats laden with their families and property, were sunk in the Multān river on the occasion of a victory obtained by the boats of the Sultān, on which they had arranged some especial contrivance,⁵ and the Jats were drowned and sank in the whirlpool of destruction, and the rest became food for the sword, their families were taken captive, and the Sultān, victorious and triumphant, returned to Ghaznīn.—

Ibn Hauqal in his article on Dailam, speaks of Rey as a large city at a distance of eight marches from Azarbaiján. It is the ancient Rhages or 'Payá of Arrian, the capital of the province of Rhagiana, first known to us in history as the place to which the Jewish exiles were sent. It was the birth place of the famous physician Abu Bakr Muhammad ibn Zakariya Ar-Râzi, familiar to the medical world as Rhâzes who lived in the tenth century. His treatise on small-pox and measles (في الجدري والحصبة) was published in a Greek translation peri loimikhē in 1548, and an English translation from the Arabic by Dr. Greenhill. (Sydenham Society, 1847) It was ten days' march from Ecbatana (Hamadán). It was called at different periods Europus and Arsacia. In modern times the ancient name has returned, and its ruins lie now to the south of Teherán and north of Isfahán. The famous jurisconsult Muhammad ibn al-Hasan, and al-Kisáfi the reader of the Qurán, are buried there. Persian Irâq comprised the regions of Rey, Qáshán, Isfahán and Hamadán. (Dict. of Greek and Roman Geog., Vol. II. art Rhaga), (Abul Feda, (Reinaud) II. ii. 169, &c.) also see I. K. (Slane), iii. 311 et seqq.

² Briggs, Vol. I. p. 83, states that Mahmúd died of stone, but a reference to Firishita in the original shews that this is not the case. The words are مرض سوء القنية يا سل بهم رسانیده &c.

The disease سوء القنية Sū-ul qinya which literally means an undesirable acquisition, is thus defined by Vüller sub voce قنيت "pravus habitus corporis, gr. καχεξία, while the following translation from the MS. copy of Bakru-l-Jawāhir in this Library will show how it is there defined:

"The disease is so called because the skin which surrounds a man and changes with his changes (i.e. contracts and expands as necessity arises) is diseased, it is the beginning of dropsy, but inasmuch as the term dropsy is specifically 421 A.H.,¹ and was buried at Ghaznín. His age was sixty years, and he had reigned thirty-one years. They say that when he was restricted to another disease, this term Sá ul qinya is made applicable to this condition."

In the Istildhátu-l-Funún we find the disease described as "the commencement of dropsy due to weakness of liver and derangement of that organ." The quotation however is an erroneous transcription from Al Mújaz of Sadídí, a translation from which follows,—he writes "the commencement of dropsy due to weakness and derangement of the liver, with resulting pallor and whiteness owing to defect in the formation of good blood from disorder and weakness of the liver, it also arises from disorder of the stomach and weakness of that organ.

The face and extremities, that is the hands and feet, and especially the eyelids, become swollen owing to the weakness of digestion and the rising of moist vapours, and their effect upon the eyelids and extremities, and at times it extends to the entire body, so that the body becomes like dough. One of its symptoms is flatulence and borborygmus, with irregularity of the bowels. All of these are due to indigestion. The gums also are affected with pustules from the evil vapours which arise.

Its cure is a gentle course of treatment for the dropsy. Means must be taken at first to secure a minimum of excrementitious products, and drinking much water must be forbidden, and the patient directed to bathe in borax and alum water, or in sea water, as bathing in fresh water is harmful. Drinking wormwood and dindárí and wardí is beneficial. The food must be appetising and strengthening to the liver, as for instance partridges; Cantharides flavoured with cloves and cinnamon and mastic and saffron are beneficial. The vomiting must be treated with aperients, when it will cease, but if more energetic treatment be required we may add agaricum and rhubarb which do no harm in this disease." (Al Muḡhání fí Sharḥi Mújaz by Sadídí).

It is evident from the above description that the disease from which Maḥmúd died was not either hectic fever (Badáuní) or phthisis سل (Firishṭa), but an anæmia, very probably "idiopathic anæmia" or "progressive pernicious anæmia." The condition of the gums points to a possibly scorbutic taint, though it was probably ulcerous stomatitis so common at the close of wasting disease. Malaria may have shared in the causation of the illness. There is just a possibility that the disease may have been myxœdema, the increase in bulk of the body with the alteration and sweating of the skin, the turgescence of the mucous membrane of the mouth—all point in this direction. Against this supposition however, is the sex and the age, both of which are in favour of pernicious anæmia. His age was 61.

The question of stone nowhere appears in the original authorities, and it is difficult to see why Briggs should put forward such a statement. See also Elliott, IV. 188, note 1.

¹ This date is the same as that given by Firishṭa.

Raverty in the Tabaqát-i-Nasrí, p. 87, note 9, gives Thursday, the 14th of dying he ordered them to bring all his wealth and treasures and property before him, he lay looking at them from time to time regretfully sighing at having to part with them: He would not give the smallest trifle to any one.

He had made the journey to Hindustán and engaged in holy war, twelve times. Verily his reckoning is with his Lord; and the story in connection with him and Firdausi¹ the poet is well known, and the holy Jámí² says:

It is well to recognize merits for when the arched sky
 At last discharged the arrows of misfortune,
 The glory of Maḥmūd passed away, nothing remained in the world
 Save only this saying "He recognized not the worth of Firdausi.

Rabf'u-ṣṣanī, 421 H. (A.D. 1030) quoting the Maqámát of Amīd Abū Naṣr by Al-Baihaqī as his authority.

The Tabaqát-i-Naṣíri gives his age at the time of his death as 61, and states that he had reigned 33 years.

¹ Abul Qásim Firdausi the celebrated poet, author of the Sháh Námah, was a native of Tús in Khorásán where he was born about 339 A.H. (950 A.D.) He died in 411 A.H. (1020 A.D.) or 416 A.H. (Guzida). He was appointed by Maḥmūd to complete the Sháh Námah. As a reward for this labour he was promised a thousand miqdáls of gold for every thousand distichs. However by the machinations of Aiyáz one of Maḥmūd's favourites who bore Firdausi a grudge for a fancied slight, the poet was represented to Maḥmūd as being a schismatic and heretic, and eventually was put off with 60,000 silver dirhams instead of the promised 60,000 miqdáls. This so enraged him that he divided the 60,000 dirhams among the attendants of the bath where he was at the time of receipt. Finally he wrote a brilliant satire on the Sultán in the very copy of the Sháhnámah which he had presented to him on its completion, and fled from Maḥmūd's court to Mázinderán and thence to Baghdád. Maḥmūd at last relented, and sent Firdausi the 60,000 dínárs with a robe of state and apologies for his former harsh treatment, but when the presents arrived the body of Firdausi was being carried out for burial. See Atashkadeh 'Azur p. 92 et seqq. also Atkinson's Sháhnámah, Preface: also Elliott, IV. 191. See also Hunter's Indian Empire, p. 219. and Beale's Dict. of Oriental Biography.

² Mulla Núrud-Dín Abdur Rahmán (Jámí) author of "Yúsuf and Zulaikha" Beháristán, &c., was born at Jám in 817 H. (?) He died in 898 H. See Atashkadeh-i-Azur p. 78.

He was called عارف the holy from his position as one of the greatest divines of his day. He was the spiritual guide of the Vazír Amír Alf Sher. He performed the Hajj in 877 A.H., and died at Herát twenty years later.

And in the Tazkira of Muḥammad Ufī,¹ the following Qitaʿa has been attributed to the Sultān Maḥmūd.

From the dread of the world-winning sword and the fear of the fort-crushing sceptre,
The world became subject to me as I am subjected to reason,
At one time there would I sit serene in my splendour and riches
At another time following Avarice roamed I from country 20.
to country;
Oft would I boastfully say Lo! I am a man of importance,
But now I clearly perceive that the King and the beggar are equals.
I, with one wave of my hand, have conquered a myriad of castles
With one firm plant of my foot I have broken lines without number When Death made the final assault, naught then did my splendour avail me
Nothing continues but God, God's kingdom alone is a kingdom.

He was a native of Merv which under the Saljūq princes was the capital of Persia. He was also known as Nūruddīn Muḥammad Ufī. (Beale, O. B. D.). See also J. R. A. S., Vol. IX. 113.

Amír Aiyáz joined Amír Mas'úd at Nishapúr,³ and four months later Amír Muḥammad moved his camp in the direction of Bust,⁴ and came out in full force from Ghaznī with the intention of fighting with his brother, and when he reached Takínábád⁵ all his Amirs having revolted against him, put out his eyes and threw him into the fort of Bajj⁶ in Majbaristán⁷ and having gone over to Amír Mas'úd with the whole army and treasures, went to Herát and met him there. The blinded Amír Muḥammad reigned five months, but according to Qázi Baizáwī⁸ it was fourteen years, and the period of his imprisonment was nine years. God knows the truth. The author of the⁹ Lubbu-t-Tawárikh writes that Muhammad ibn Mahmúd wielded sovereignty in Ghazna for four years in the first instance, during the reign of his father, afterwards he was imprisoned for nine years by the command of his brother Mas'úd, and after the murder of Mas'úd he reigned for another year and then died.

SHAHÁBU-D-DAULAT SULTÁN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

By the consent of the Amírs and Vazírs of Mahmúd he ascended the imperial throne, and having come from Harí² to Balkh, spent the winter there, and summoning Aḥmad ibn Ḥasan Maimandí whom Sultán Mahmúd kept a prisoner in the fort of Kálínjar, made him a Vazír. Then leaving Balkh he came to Ghaznín and thence started for Sípáhán and Rái, and arriving at Herát engaged in war with the Turkománs, and not overcoming them, but on the contrary suffering defeat at their hands, turned back. The Turkománs increased in power day by day owing to his weakness, till affairs assumed the aspect which they eventually did.³

H. (see Raverty 132, note 2). Born 424 A. H., murdered 465 A. H. The lines are attributed by the author of the Tabaqát-i-Náṣirí to Ḥakím Sanái a celebrated poet of Ghaznī. His most celebrated work is the Ḥadīqat-ul-Ḥaqīqat wa Shar'atu-t-Tawīqat otherwise known as Fakhri-námah. His full name was Abú Muḥammad ibn Adam Sanái Al Ḥakím. He died in the year 525 H. Hindustán marched towards the fortress of Sarsati¹ which is situated in the way to Kashmír, laid siege to it and reduced it and made his way to Ghaznín with great booty. Then in 425 H. Sultán Mas'úd reduced Amal² and Sári³ and sending legates to Kálinjar and Tabaristán established his authority there⁴ and sent Tughdí Beg and⁵ Husain ibn 'Alí ibn Maikál with a large army from Nishápúr against the Turkománs, and a severe battle ensued in which Husain was taken prisoner and Tughdí Beg fled and returned to the Amír Mas'úd.

Amír Ahmad Niyál Tigin⁶ the treasurer of Sultán Mas'úd whom Mas'úd had fined and had sent to Hindústán,⁷ on arriving in Hindústán revolted⁸ and the Amír Mas'úd nominated a general of the Hindús named Náhir⁹ to oppose him. Ahmad being overcome in battle fled to Mangúrah¹⁰ in Sindh and was drowned—his head they sent to Ghaznín. In the year 427 H. Sultán took his seat upon that throne and having placed the crown upon his head gave a public audience. And in this self same year he bestowed upon Amír Maudúd ibn Mas'úd (his son) the drum and ensign,¹ and despatched him to Balkh while he himself proceeded with an army against Hindústán—captured the fort of Hānsí² and thence proceeded to the fortress of Sonpat.³ Deipál⁴ the commander of that fortress fled to the forest and lay hid there. They reduced the fort and captured immense booty putting to the sword the greater part of Deipál's army, but he himself escaped alone. From thence Mas'úd turned his steps towards the valley of Rām⁵ who sent a large offering accompanied by a written apology for his non-appearance. Amír Mas'úd accepted his excuses and giving the Amír⁶ Abúl-Mujáhid son of Mas'úd,⁷ the drum and standard (of commission) sent him to Lahore and retraced his steps to Ghaznín.

MS. (B) reads, و سلطان ازاب جیشون گذشته تمام قصد بلخ نمود

Preference must be given to MS. (A), the copyist evidently having mistaken his place after the first تمام and instead of continuing ماورا النهر he has gone on قصد بلخ نمود that he was a careless and incompetent copyist is shown by the next line where he writes كوركان دراز كرد و دروين اژدا تغدي بنواحي كوركان دراز كرد crossing the Jihūn occupied the whole of Transoxiāna. Dáúd the Turkomán, who had previously defeated Tughdí Beg and Amír Husain, marched with a large force towards Balkh. Amír Mas'úd thereupon returned from Transoxiāna to Balkh and Dáúd the Turkomán¹ leaving Balkh, went to Merv. In the meantime Tughdí Beg² had been acting oppressively in the neighbourhood of Gurgán. When the Amír Mas'úd perceived the symptoms of his rebellion he ordered him to be impaled. The Amír Mas'úd then exacted a stipulation and promise from Béghú³ the Turkomán who was the chief of that tribe, that henceforward they would never attempt any lawlessness, and having delimited their boundaries in a suitable way left for Herát. While on his way thither a body of the Turkománs fell upon the army of Mas'úd, killing some and plundering the baggage. The soldiers of the Sultán who were told off to attack them made the whole of that party food for the sword, and brought their wives and families together with the heads of the slain into the presence of Amír Mas'úd who sent asses laden with the heads to Béghú. Béghú apologized, and it so happens that this is the very same Béghú in praise of whom the poet Ziáí⁴ of Persia has composed several odes from which the following verses are selected—

24. It is wrong for me to bewail the misfortunes of others than thee,
It is wrong not to weep with thy sorrow.
My occupation day and night is to lament and bewail thy sorrow.

⁴ Zāu-d-Dīn Khojandī Al Fārsī, a native of Shīrāz who left Shīrāz in his youth and took up his abode at Khajand. He was a contemporary and panegyrist of Sultán Malik Sháh Saljuqí, and died at Herát in the year 522 H. (In the Majma'-ul Fusahá from which these particulars are taken, the date of his death is 622 H., but this is an error as Malik Sháh died in 491 H.)

Beale (Oriental Biographical Dictionary) gives the date as 622 H., but this is in all probability copied from the above authority.

Thou did'st say, "Thou did'st weep for love of me," but verily there is a difference in shedding blood and shedding tears

At all hours I suffer a thousand pangs for the grief of the love of thee, nor do I weep alone.

I cannot but melt with love of thee, nor is there any remedy for the pain I suffer for thee, save weeping.

Apart from thee Fate has nothing in store for me
Save vexation, one day, and weeping the next.

From thy era discord springs, for if not how comes it to pass that the whole world should weep from my time to that of ocean weeps like a cloud from every pore!

over thy enemies in the field of battle,

What is prepared for thine adversary in either world?

There is the torture of hell, here he must weep.

Lo! one who in the madness of his fear at thy displeasure
Seeks to hide himself in a corner and prepares to weep.

Thy enemies have many manifest and hidden projects

But the wound is hidden, the weeping is manifest.

I believe that this must have come into your exalted mind,

After all what use is praise to me with weeping.

When I recite any poem in separation from thee

Both the first and last verses weep for anguish.

 May it be thy lot to smile after a happy life,
 May it be the fate of thy enemies perforce to weep.

Oh thou whose lip distils sugar² at the opening of each smile!

Thy ruby lip when thou smilest, rebukes the soul.
 In every movement thy curling locks ravish the heart
 In every smile thy ruby lip scatters the life blood.
 The trade of thy hyacinthine ringlets is to scatter perfume,
 The habit of thy delicate lips is to smile sweetly.
 Till thou seest not the cheek of gold thou smilest not,
 Every flower smiles from the enjoyment of the gold.
 When thou smilest a whole world smiles looking towards thee For no one before this has seen the sun and moon to smile (at one time.)

I have a great sorrow and lamentation, and endless grief and pain,

I have in separation from thee all of these, but no smile.
 What could mankind have learned of the shape of thy mouth
 Had'st thou not given them from thine own mouth the news

Because of thy cruelty I do not smile, for at the time of mourning

The wise and excellent do not approve of smiling.

All my disorder is due to grief on thy account,
 Why then do you smile at me disordered as I am?

It may be that from the crown and canopy of kings thy locks and cheek have learned to smile both morning and evening.

Conqueror of infidelity, Nizāmu-ud-Dīn, whose friends are always engaged in enjoyment, and only vary it by smiling. If the seed could receive the good tidings of his approbation, even from the loins of his father would one begin to smile. A father to whom a son is essential to do him service, smiles from the pleasure he experiences at the success of his son. It is not strange that from the excess of his joy, the cloud of weeping which shrouded his moist eyes gives place to smiling.

Then he put to death some of the inhabitants of Mahnah, and cut off the hands and feet of many more and thence went in the direction of Zírqn³ in which place the Turkománs brought together a large army and fought a severe battle with the Sultán. In this battle the majority of the generals of the army of Ghaznín mutinied and went over to the enemy. The Sultán remaining all alone on the field, felled several of the Turkomán leaders with sword, spear and mace, and eventually came out of that engagement safely. This event took place on the 8th of Ramazán, 431 H. (1039 A. D.). From thence Amír Mas'úd came to Merv, and several of the soldiery from the neighbouring country having come in at last sided with him. ² Mahnah. Firishta says ماهانه Mahtaks but ماهانه is undoubtedly the right reading. In Persian this name is spelt ماهانه Maihana, a small town of the district of Khabarán between Abíward and Sarakhs. See Meynard, Dict. de la Perse, 558.

³ Zírqn is not mentioned by other authors I have consulted and may be a clerical error. The name of the place where this battle was fought was Dandángán a town in the vicinity of Merv, cf. Raverty, p. 94, note 3. Also Abul Feda II. ii. 197. Meynard, p. 239. It seems to me most probable that we should read زند خان though all MSS. give زیر خان. Zandkhán, زند خان is a fortified town situated at the distance of one farsakh from Sarakhs (Meynard, 288).

He then appointed the Amír Muḥammad¹ with two thousand soldiers to proceed to Multán, and sent the Amír of that district² to the foot of the hills of Ghaznín to restrain the Afgháns of that district who had broken out into rebellion; and having laden camels with the whole of Maḥmúd's treasures which were stored in Ghaznín and the neighbouring fortresses started for Hindustán and despatched messengers en route to bring his brother Amír Muḥammad who had been blinded³ and was then confined in the fortress of Bazghand.⁴ When Sultán Mas'úd arrived at the frontier fort⁵ of Márikala,⁶ his slaves plundered all the treasure-camels. In the meantime the Amír Muḥammad arrived there, and the slaves who recognised that this violence would have no successful issue unless another governor were appointed⁷ perforce, approached the Amír Muḥammad, raised him to the Sovereignty and breaking into open riot assaulted Sultán Mas'úd who had taken refuge in that fort. The next day the whole army becoming violent brought Amír Mas'úd from within the fort of Márikala and made him prisoner confining him within the fortress of Kírí,⁸ till at last in Jamádu-l-Awwal 432 H. they sent a false

² The words in the text appear to be a misprint for the following امیر ایزدیار which is Firishta's version. The Amír Izad Yár was Mas'úd's fifth son. Both MSS. however have امیر این دیار را

This story is according to the relation of Nizāmī,¹ but the Qāzī Baiḏāwī relates that in the year 432 Mas'ūd fled defeated from before the Seljūqs to Ghaznīn, and Amír Muḥammad who had consolidated his power during Mas'ūd's absence sent him to a fortress whither his son Aḥmād ibn Muḥammad followed him and murdered him.² The Government of Sultān Mas'ūd ibn Maḥmūd lasted eleven years, but we ought to note that the Qāzī Baiḏāwī (may God's mercy be upon him) assigns the year 433 H. as the date of the death of Mas'ūd, and writes that Muḥammad ibn Maḥmūd reigned in Ghaznīn for fourteen years after his father,³ one year after his father's death, nine years in the lifetime of his brother, and four years after his brother's death, as has already been stated. God alone knows the truth. Apparently this is due to the mistake of a copyist. Among the poets who flourished in

² Baiḏāwī's account is as follows:—

Mas'ūd after his arrival at Ghaznīn sent Yūsuf to prison and became master of all the dominions of his father. In his time the Seljūqs crossed the Jihūn and invaded Khurāsān. He fought with them and made peace with them several times but being defeated in A. H. 432, he returned to Ghaznīn where his brother Muḥammad had regained power in his absence. On his arrival he was consigned to a fort, and Aḥmād, the son of Muḥammad, went direct from his father to the fort, and there slew him, A. H. 433; Elliott II. 256.

³ That is from 421 A. H. to 434 A. H. with interruptions during the supremacy of Mas'ūd. Maḥmūd died in 421 A. H. Mas'ūd was murdered on the 11th of Jamādī-ul-Awwal, 433 H. (Raverty, pp. 95-6.)

Muḥammad was put to death by Maḥmūd in revenge for his father's murder in the year 434 H. Maḥmūd reigned seven years and died in 441 H. (1049 A.D.)

the time of Sultān Mas'ūd is Manúchihri⁴ who speaks as follows in a qaṣīdah concerning his Wazīr.

Ascended the throne of Empire (after the murder of his father in Bámián¹) with the consent of the Wazīrs and Amírs, and with the object of avenging his father purposed to march towards Mári galah, but Abu Naṣr Aḥmád ibn Muḥammad ibn Abduṣ Ṣamad opposed his projected expedition and brought him to Ghaznín, whence he proceeded with a large army to attack his uncle the blind Amír Muḥammad. On arriving at Dípúr² he engaged in a severe battle with the Amír Muḥammad and thus passed the whole day till nightfall when both fell back upon their positions. The next day Sultān Mandúd induced the Amír Saiyyid Maṣṣúr who was one of the trusted (generals) of the Amír Muḥammad to side with him, and engaging in battle took prisoners the Amír Muḥammad and his son Aḥmád and put them all to death. The Amír Maudúd founded there a city which he

And in the year 434 H. Artagin at the order of the Sultán proceeded with an army to Tabaristán against Dá'úd⁴ the Turko-mán, and having lost in battle a large number of his men came to Balkh and established the coinage and proclamation of sovereignty in the name of the Amír Maudúd. Afterwards when the Turko-máns attacked him several times in force not being able to contend with them, he quitted Balkh and came to Ghaznín. Then in the year 435 H. Amír Maudúd imprisoned Abū 'Alí the Kotwál of Ghaznín for a time, but eventually appointed him as the Diwán of the kingdom and Kotwál of Ghaznín, and imprisoned Yasúrí ibn Iyamghúr the Diwán, till at length he died in confinement; he also punished Altigin⁵ and in the year 436 H. Khwāja Táḥír who had succeeded Khwāja Aḥmad as Wazír, died, and was succeeded by Khwāja Imám Abul Fath 'Abdur Razzáq.⁶ In this same year he sent Tughral Hájib in the direction of Bust, who took prisoner Abū Mansúr Zangí,⁷ the brother of Abul Faḡl and brought him to Ghaznín, he then departed for Seistán and having ² The latter date must be the correct one as Mas'úd was not put to death till 433 A. H. See note 3, page 45.

The Tárikh-i-Mas'údí, however, writes as follows:—

In the year 438 H., he sent Tughral to Takinábád who on arrival there revolted. Accordingly Alí bin Rabí' was nominated to proceed thither and Tughral fled with a few followers. Alí plundered his army, and having captured some of them brought them to Ghaznín. In the year 439 H. the Amir Qazdár raised a rebellion³ and suffered defeat at the hands of Hájib Buzurg Bártagín⁴ and after a time tendered his submission.

And in the year 440 H. having conferred upon his two sons Abul Qásim Maḥmúd and Maṣṣúr on the same day robes of honour and the drum and ensigns of commission sent one of them towards Lahore and the other towards Parshúr⁵ and he sent Abú Alí Hasan Kotwál of Ghaznín to Hindustán to punish the rebels there, and when Hasan returned to Ghaznín after having done good service Maudúd made him over to Mirak ibn Hasan with orders to imprison him. He died in prison. As a sequel to this, Mirak ibn Hasan the Vakíl who had murdered Abú 'Alí Hasan without the orders of Amir Maudúd and had kept it secret, incited the King to proceed to Kábul so that that misdeed of his might remain concealed. When the Amír Maudúd reached the fortress of Siálkot¹ he was attacked with colic² and was forced to return to Ghaznín, and ordered Mirak to release Abú Alí Kotwál. He accordingly prayed for a week's respite, and in the interim Amír Maudúd departed this life on the 24th of Rajab A. H. 441, having reigned nearly nine years. The *Lubbu-t-Tawárikh*³ states that Sultán Maudúd asked in marriage the daughter of Chughz⁴ Beg Saljúqí, by whom he had a son whom he named Mas'úd, that he reigned seven years, and that in the month of Rajab 441 he attempted to go to Khorásán to visit Chughz Beg, but died on the journey of colic. 33.

² Firishṭa also says سرخ كلاه and does not mention the word قزلباش though Briggs translates "called Kuzil Básh, owing to their wearing red caps" Briggs, Vol. I, p. 121. قزلباش Qizil Red is Turkish باش Básh. Head is Turkí.

³ In one copy we find قاضد بغی Firishṭa has the following امير قضا دار بغی ورزید so we should read here امير قزدار طغیان ورزید

² قولنج. Probably intestinal obstruction which is included under the term قولنج Qúlinj of which there are stated by Sadídí to be five varieties. Cf. Sadídí Art. قولنج.

i. القولنج الحقيقي True or spasmodic colic.

ii. القولنج السدّي Obstructive colic—due as he says to an accumulation of بلغم or mucus in the cæcum or colon.

iii. القولنج الرّيحى Flatulent colic.

iv. ورم حار او بارد ابعاء وما يجاورها مثل الكبد والكلى An acute or chronic swelling of the bowels and neighbouring parts such as the liver and kidneys.

v. القولنج الالتوي Twisted colic which he defines as a twist of the distal end of the small intestine. Volvulus.

In the بحر الجواهر we find the following definition of the disease: "A disease in which the bowels become disarranged on account of some unnatural obstruction (لاحتباس غير طبعي) It is very painful and increases in violence and is fatal."

Defining the Colon the author says: اكثر تولد القولنج فيها واولونج يشنق منها

Colic principally arises in this bowel and is a strangulation of part of it.

SULTÂN MAS'ÚD IBN MAUDÚD IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

Ascended the throne in the third year of his age by the machinations of 'Alí ibn Rabí', however his affairs did not prosper and they raised his uncle to the throne after he had reigned only five months.¹

SULTÂN 'ALÍ IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

Ascended the throne by the consent of the nobles, and when 'Abdu-r-Razzâq ibn Ahmad Maimandí who had been sent by the Amír Maudúd towards Seistán arrived at a fort between Bust and Isfirár,² and learned that Abdu-r-Rashíd ibn Maḥmúd was confined in that fort by the orders of the Amír Maudúd, he brought him back and placed him upon the throne, 'Alí having reigned for a period of about three months. This event took place in the year 443 H. (1051 A.D.)

SULTÂN 'ABDU-R-RASHÍD IBN MAHMÚD.

34. Came to the throne, and with the consent of 'Abdu-r-Razzâq proceeded to Ghaznín. 'Alí ibn Mas'úd fled without engaging in battle, and Tughral Hájib who was one of the household slaves of Sultán Maḥmúd having conquered Seistán turned his steps towards Ghaznín. Amír 'Abdu-r-Rashíd fortified himself there till Tughral obtaining an opportunity in the year 445 H. (1053 A.D.) put the Amír Abdur Rashíd with all the descendants of Sultán Maḥmúd³ to death and married the daughter of Mas'úd against her will. One day when he was on the throne a body of determined wrestlers inspired with hatred against him tore him to pieces. 'Abdu-r-Rashíd's reign lasted for four years, but in the Nizamu-t-Tawdrikkh his reign is said to have lasted for seven years,¹ and in the Tubbu-t-Tawdrikkh his death is said to have occurred in the year 445 H. God knows the truth.

SULTÁN FARRUKH ZÁD IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

Being released from confinement succeeded to the kingdom by consent of the nobles. A body of Saljúqs came up against Ghaznín, and Farrukhzád put most of them to death and overcame them, and made many of them prisoners and sent them to Ghaznín. Alp Arsalán² the Saljúq king brought an army against Ghaznín from 'Irâq and Khorásân, and being victorious in fight conveyed a large number of the notables of Ghaznín to Khorásân. Eventually upon the arrangement of terms of peace the prisoners of both sides obtained their release, and since Zábulistân had been laid waste the Sultán remitted the usual tribute, and treated the inhabitants with kindness. He used to fast three months, and used to spend the greater part of the night in prayer. He died of colic in the year 450 H.³ The period of his reign was six years. 35.

SAIYYIDU-S-SALÁTÍN IBRAHÍM IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

Ascended the throne. He was a just and devout king, and used to write each year a Qurán with his own hand and despatch it to the holy city of Mekka. He built no house for himself with the exception of a temple and a school to the honour and glory of God. When the affairs of state devolved upon him, he made peace with the Saljúqs and being free from apprehension, went to Hindustán and conquered many fortresses and districts.

¹ Firishta says "less than one year." Tabaqât-i-Nâsirî says two and a half years.

² Alp Arsalán son of Dáúd, son of Mikâil son of Saljúq was the second Sultán of the family and dynasty of the Saljúqs. He succeeded his uncle Tughrál Beg in 435 A.H. (1063 A.D.) He was born in 421 A.H. and was murdered 466 A.H. and was buried at Merv.

For a full account of this prince see D'Herbelot, pp. 198-203.

See also Ibn Khalliqán (Slane) iii. 230 and seqq; where it is stated that Alp Arsalán was born in the year 424 (A.D. 1032-3) and died on the 10th of Rabí'u-l Awwal 465 A. H. (1072 A.D.)

³ Firishta mentions that a year previous to his death an attempt was made upon his life while he was in the hammám

- From one city¹ the inhabitants of which were of Khurásánian descent, whom (Afrásiáb) had expelled, and who had become a populous community in Hindustán, he took prisoners a hundred thousand persons,² and sent them to Ghaznín, with other spoils on the same scale. He built a number of towns, among them Khairábád, and Imánábád and others. He has been described by the title of Saiyyidu-s-Saláṭín, and enjoyed the reputation of being a Wálí.³ In his reign in Ghaznín, the Dárú-i-Chashm (eye medicine) and other mixtures and medicaments and dietaries for all diseased folk used to be obtainable from his store-house. His death took place in the year 472 H.,⁴ after a reign of thirty years. Qázi Baizáwí says that his reign extended from the year 450 H. to the year 492 H. *Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán*⁵ flourished in his time and the following verses are taken from an ode which was written in his honour.

¹ Named "Daria." (Firishta) where we read كه افراسياب از سر كشي ایشان بشك آمده باز و فرزند از ولایت خراسان اخراج کرده بود و بهندوستان فرستاده

In our author's text we read — و آخر ایشان را اخراج کرده which is evidently corrupt. The words in the Tabaqát Akbar Sháhí are almost identical with those quoted from Firishta and some such change as the substitution of the word افراسياب for the words اخر ایشان which may easily have arisen from a copyist's mistake, seems to have occurred in our text. (MSS. (A) and (B) are like the text).

² Because they were idolaters and refused to embrace Islám, according to Firishta.

⁴ Firishta says 482 H. or 492 H. Tabaqát-i-Násirí 492 H. with a reign of forty-two years.

⁵ Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán Jurjání. Known sometimes as Hamudání. The son of Khája Sa'd ibn Salmán. A famous poet native of Jurján who attained

 Thirdly his golden pen, fourthly his brilliant dagger.

This ode he finished completely in the same style, and in another place he says :—

Emperor of the higher world, from the blessings of whose

The sword's lofty occupation is the control of things temporal and spiritual.

Mas'úd (Fortunatus) because from the fortune of the expansion of kingdom's conquest

He has gone beyond that which comes within the scope of the sword.

Ode.

Oh thou that hast formed the design of travel and girded
 the loins of conquest,

Right and left of thee the heavens have opened for thee the doors of conquest,

Mas'úd, the world-conquering, for whom the age of fortune
 Has sent forth every moment the heralds of conquest,

Like a lance point thou hast placed thy head in the direction of battle,

Like an arrow thy waist girds up the loins of conquest,

In sooth, a hundred victories thou winnest, and a hundred years hence

In Hindustán in all directions will be seen the traces of thy 37.
 conquest.

So many are thy conquests, that in the expanse of the world
 Every day in every place they tell the tale of thy conquests.

high distinction in the service of Mas'úd bin Mahmúd and Sulján Ibrahím of Ghaznín but was imprisoned for a time in the fortress of Nái owing to the spiteful rancour of Abul Faraj Rúní. He obtained his release upon the death of Mas'úd ibn Mahmúd. He was however again made prisoner for some years and upon being released left the court and went into retirement in Ghaznín where he died. There is a very long account of him with copious extracts from his various poems in the Majma'ul Fuṣahá, Vol. I. pp. 514 and seqq. See also Beale (O.B.D. p. 173.) and Atashkada-i-Aḡur, p. 162.

Thy spear and thy arrow and thy sword will be
 If my fancy limns a line, the painter of the forms of conquest
 When thy sword said I will deal a light blow
 Its oath lay not heavy save on the head of conquest.

The Ustád Abul Faraj Rúní¹ too was eulogist of Sultán Ibrahim, and also the panegyrist of Sultán Mas'úd, and many odes in their honour are to be found in his Díwán, and Rúín² is the name of a village of the dependencies of Lahore; and in these days it is as one may say in ruins, because not a trace of it remains, and the following qit'a'h in praise of Sultán Ibrahim is by the Ustád Abul Faraj.

Hail to the might of thy powerful sword
 Precious as the breath of life, and rare as wisdom itself.
 Thou hast imprisoned that lifeless one, as one seizes the throat,
 Thou hast made orphan this which has no issue like a peerless pearl.

38. And Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán with that envious nature which is peculiar to poets, bore a grudge against Ustád, who became the cause of Mas'úd's imprisonment for ten years, he wrote this rubá'i (quatrain) in prison.³

¹ Abul Faraj Rúní, a celebrated poet. The name Rúní is from the village of Rúna (رُونا) in Nisápur. He was a great favourite and companion of Sultán Ibrahim, and we learn from Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán Jurjání that he fell under the displeasure of that king and was imprisoned in the fortress of Nái by the calumny of Abul Faraj, as is stated in the text a few lines further on. Abul Faraj lived for some time at Láhere, so that he is known to a few as "Láhorí." His writings were very elegant and served as a model for the poet Anwarí. A Díwán of his containing about 2,000 verses is extant. (Majma'ul Fuṣahá I. 70). See also Atashkada-i-Aḡur, pp. 137, 138.

² Beale (O.B.D., p. 15) says that he came from "Rún a place near Lahore." It would appear from the text above that Badáoní attributed his name of Rúní to his connection with the village of Rúín. The author of the Majma'ul Fuṣahá gives no authority for the statement above quoted so that it is difficult to decide which of the places is to be given the honour.

³ He was imprisoned in the year 572 H. by Maḥmúd ibn Ibrahim in the fortress of Nái. (Majma'ul Fuṣahá loc. cit.). See note 5, page 52.

For thy prison such a prisoner as Malik Sháh is necessary
 So that thy fetter may chafe the foot of monarchs.¹
 That one who springs from the loins of Sa'd Salmán
 Even were he a serpent would not sting thy realm.

The following verses are also by him :

My heart has become rent in all directions like a comb from regrets
 Because I saw a white hair in the tooth of the comb.

There are extant also Díwáns by him in Arabic, Persian and Hindi.

'ALÁU-D-DÍN MAS'ÚD IBN IBRAHÍM IBN SULTÁN MAS'ÚD,

He gave battle with thirty thousand cavalry and being defeated went to Hindustán. Sultán Sinjar remained forty days in Ghaznín and after presenting that country to Bahrám Sháh retraced his steps. Arsalán Sháh having collected a large army in Hindustán proceeded thence to attack Ghaznín, and Bahrám Sháh not being able to withstand him sought refuge in the fortress of Bámián and with the assistance of Sultán Sinjar having again seized Ghaznín and taken Arsalán Sháh captive put him to death in the year 510 H. And the *Hadiqatu-l-Haqiqat*¹ of Shaikh Sanái is written in honour of Bahrám Sháh, it was written during his imprisonment, the reason of which imprisonment was Ghaznévide fanaticism with regard to Sunni doctrine, when this book having reached the capital of Baghdád received the imprimatur of the chief men and nobles, it attested the reality of his faith, and they wrote a memorandum which led to his being released. A short time subsequently he departed this life. It is said that when they accused the worthy Shaikh Sanái of heresy after he composed the Hadiqat, he wrote the following letter to the Sultán Bahrám Sháh.

In the name of God the merciful, the compassionate:

Praise be to God the Lord of the worlds, and blessings upon the best of His created beings, Muḥammad, his family and companions all of them. To proceed, it is said in certain traditionary sayings, that two things tend to prolong life, and to cause rain to fall and trees to grow, one of these is to assist the oppressed—the other to repress the tyrannical. An argument which they have advanced in support of this is that the prophet, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him, declared that the heavens are established by righteousness (equity). Equity is like the bird² which, wherever it casts its shadow, secures an amplitude of

And God, may He be glorified and exalted, preserves the Emperor of Islám, and the just king Bahrá'm Sháh ibn Mas'úd Sháh ibn Ibrá'hím Sháh ibn Mas'úd Sháh ibn Mahmúd Sháh, from iniquity and oppression, and although the whole world should combine to write and describe the stock and supply of grateful acknowledgment of this slave's heart, they would have no power to express it, and the tree which the king of the kingdom planted² for the discovery of the secrets of the unseen, even Gabriel and Micháel³ were precluded from having any share therein: it is certain that in all circumstances the just man is happy and the tyrant is miserable, and the worst of all oppression is this that a small party should read a subject and not understand it, but become arrogant with regard to it and loosen the tongue of censure against the learned. Hence it is that our prophet, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him, said, Pity three people, a rich man who has become poor, the great man of a tribe who is disgraced, and a wise man among fools.⁴ A book which is written in the language of the learned in the knowledge of God, demands an acute and discriminating mind such as that of Bá'yazíd⁵ and

That Amīr revolted, and fought a severe battle with the Sultān in the vicinity of Multān, and a bitter conflict ensued; in the end the Sultān's enemy fell a prisoner into his hands and was put to death, and a second time the country of Hindustān came into his possession, and 'Alāu-d-Dīn Ḥasan ibn Ḥusain Sūrī who is one of the kings of Ghor revolted against him and proceeded to Ghaznīn. Bahrām Shāh fled and 'Alāu-d-Dīn left his brother Saifu-d-Dīn Sūrī in Ghaznīn. Bahrām Shāh returned and retook Ghaznīn, and having seated Saifu-d-Dīn upon a cow, and having exposed him to public ridicule, killed him in the worst possible way. and for the second time returned to Lahore, where he died in the year 555 H., after a reign of eight years. In his time many great poets flourished and wrote odes in praise of him. The following poem is of the kind called *Tarjī'band*¹ and was written by one of them in his honour.

The revered Emperor Khusrau Sháh who with ease

- It must be stated, that in the historical works by Qāzī Baizáwī and others² it has been written that when 'Aláu-d-Dín plundered Ghaznah and put many of the inhabitants to death, he left there Ghiyásu-d-Dín Abul-fath Muḥammad and Shihábu-d-Dín Abul Muzaffar who were his nephews. They then with great craft put Khusrau Sháh at his ease with regard to themselves and took up their abode in his city. Khusrau Sháh³ was imprisoned in the year 555 H., and died in the same year, and the days of the Ghaznévide family came to an end. After a time Ghiyásu-d-Dín died, and the whole kingdom remained in the possession of Shihábu-d-Dín, but since Khwāja Nizámu-d-Dín Aḥmad deceased, has written in the Tárikh-i-Nizámī copying from the Rauzat-u-s-

Baizáwī states that the Ghaznévide dynasty ended with Khusru Sháh. The work here quoted is best known as the Ṭabaqát-i-Akbari, but its author called it Ṭabaqát-i-Akbar-Sháhí, and Badāoni calls it also by that name as well as by the name Tárikh-i-Nizámī. As has been seen the present work is admitted by the author to be merely an abridgment of the kingdom, and the dynasty of the Ghaznévíyah was growing old while that of Ghor was in full vigour, accordingly Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám, who is well-known under the title of Sultán Shihábu-d-Dín Ghorí, having gained the upper hand and making Ghaznín his capital, brought an army against Hindústán and came with overwhelming force near to Lahore. Khusrau Malik fortified himself there and was compelled to ask for quarter in a personal interview. Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám took him to Ghaznín, from thence sending him to Sultán Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín, who imprisoned him in Fíroz Koh¹ and sent an order, and after ten years' confinement made him taste the cup of destruction.

The real facts are that the son Khusrau Malik succeeded his father and reigned till 583 (H.) (1187 A. D.), as is stated by our author.

II. THE GHORÍ DYNASTY.

Who reigned in Dehli. This dynasty commences with Sultán Shihābu-d-Dīn Ghorī² who is known as Muizzu-d-Dīn Muḥammad ibn Sām.

SULTÁN MUIZZU-D-DÍN MUḤAMMAD IBN SÁM GHORÍ.

Ascending the throne as regent in place of his elder brother Sultán Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn, king of Ghor and 'Irāq and Khorásán, in the year 569 H., in Ghaznīn, had the Khutba read and the currency struck in his own name,³ and in obedience to the command of his brother brought several armies against Hindustán and raised aloft the standard of holy war. Dehli was reduced in his time.

¹ None of these estimates are exactly accurate, that of the Tarikh-i-Nizāmī is the nearest. The actual duration of the Ghaznévide dynasty taking Khusrau Malik as the last representative was from 366 A. H. (976 A. D.) to 583 A. H. (1187 A. D.) a period of 217 years during which time there were fifteen sovereigns.

It is difficult to see how Baizáwī arrives at his statement above quoted as from the accession of Maḥmūd in 387 A. H., to that of Khusrau Sháh in 552 A. H. is 165 years during which twelve kings reigned.

The statement of Qāzī Yahyá 'Qazwīnī is so far from the truth as to be impossible.

If we take Khusrau Sháh as the last Ghaznévide king the dynasty lasted from 366 A. H. to 555 A. H., a period of 189 years.

² Who was nominated with his elder brother Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn to the charge of a province of Ghor by his uncle Aláu-d-Dīn Husain Jahānsoz.

³ As a matter of fact the coins were struck in the joint names of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn and Muizzu-d-Dīn, and as Thomas remarks the superlative الأعظم "The greatest" is applied to Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn while Muizzu-d-Dīn is only styled الملك "Great" (Thomas, Pathán kings of Dehli, p. 13).

In brief, Sultán Ghiyáṣu-d Dín when he had seized Tagínábád¹ which was one of the dependencies of Garmsir and had made over the governorship of that place to Sultán Shahábu-d-Dín, used continually to bring up armies against Ghaznín, till at last in the abovementioned year Sultán Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín brought that country within the circle of his conquests, and drove out of Ghaznín the tribe of Ghuzz, who after the captivity of Sultán Sinjar had been in possession of it, and bestowed upon Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad, the title of Sultán Shihábu-d-Dín.² Sultán Shihábu-d-Dín after one year of sovereignty as vicegerent

² The statement in the text forms the subject of considerable controversy as there are found those who assert that the title Shihábu-d-Dín is an impossible one as applied to Muizzu-d-Dín popularly known as Muḥammad Ghorí. (see Raverty's Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣirí p. 446 note 5). It is true that the author of the Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣirí states that Muizzu-d-Dín was originally called Zangí while Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín was called Ḥabshi—both of them being called Muḥammad. He goes on to say that prior to Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín's accession to the throne Ghorí he was called Shamsu-d-Dín and that Muizzu-d-Dín was called Shihábu-d-Dín. The actual statement is

و پیش ازین لقب او ملک شمس الدین بود و لقب برادرش شهاب الدین
بعد از مدتی که بر تخت بود لقب از سلطان غیاث الدین شد و برادرش ملک
شهاب الدین بعد از فتوح خراسان سلطان معز الدین شد -

"Before this his title had been Malik Shamsu-d-Dín and the title of his brother had been Shihábu-d-Dín. Some time after his accession his title was changed to Sultán Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín." From this the possibility is not excluded that the author of the Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣirí intended to lay stress not so much upon the change of names as the change of dignity, the assumption that is, by both of the title of Sultán.

But whatever may be decided about this there can be no question that the name "Shihábu-d-Dín" is just as applicable to the person known more familiarly as Muḥammad Ghorí, as is the name "Muizzu-d-Dín," and Badáoni evidently held this opinion as he henceforth speaks of him constantly as "Shihábu-d-Dín."

On the other hand if this really was a subsequently acquired title it is certainly strange that it does not appear on any of his coins on which he is always styled As Sultán Al-Muazzam (or Al-A'zam) Muizzu-d-Dunyá wad Dín Abú-l-Muzaḥfar Muḥammad ibn Sám.

It is not however a point of serious importance as it involves no disputed question of identity.

And in the year 582 H. he came again to Lahore and plundered the surrounding country, and having provided Husain with the means of fortifying and holding Siálkot retraced his steps, and from Tárikh-i-Nizámí which is the original source of this selection we gather that the building of Siálkot took place in this year, in contradiction to the *Mubárahsháhi*² from which we learn that the building of Siálkot was two years earlier. God knows the truth. And inasmuch as the house of history is, like the house of dreams and other things of that sort, ruinous, apologies must be made for discrepancies; and in that year Khusrau Malik with the assistance of the *Khrúkhars*³ and other tribes, besieged the fort of Siálkot for a long time, but had to return without attaining his object. In this year also Muizzu-d-Din again besieged Khusrau Sháh in Láhore, who after striving for some days, found himself

The position of Debal. Judging by the map given in Tieffenthaler Debal lay between Karáchi and Tatta at a distance of 30 miles from the former and seventy from the latter, almost due East from Karáchi and N.-W. of Tatta. It lay at a distance of about 20 miles from the sea on one of the large arms into which the Mehrán (Indus) divided in those days, but which to judge from modern maps have now disappeared or much diminished in size. It also lay a short distance to the North of Lári Bunder which was at the head of an arm of the sea which had evidently in former times been an arm of the Indus also, at a distance of about ten miles to the South; the arm of the river joining the sea from Debal lay some six miles or so to the westward.

This position tallies with that of the ruined city mentioned by Ibn Batúta, Paris Edition, III. 112, 113, 114, a translation of the description of which is given in Cunningham's Anc. Geog., p. 299, 300.

unequal to the task, and yielded to the Sultán who conveyed him to Ghaznín and sent him to his brother Sultán Ghiyágu-d-Dín at Firoza Koh. Ghiyágu-d-Dín imprisoned him in one of the fortresses of Ghurjistán, where he died a prisoner, and the plain of Empire once for all passed to the dynasty of Ghor without the thorn of a partner or rival, as has been already mentioned.

QITA'II.

If you saddle the piebald horse of Circumstance, and if the white horse of state leads thee beside him,
 And if the garden of your pleasure in happiness
 copies fair the past memories of Paradise,
 Be not proud, for this mean time will unexpectedly draw its pen through the writing of your fortune.
 Time is like a wind, which at the first draws from the cheek of the rose the veil with all respect, Then after a week has passed in the midst of the garden, drags its body with ignominy to the dust.
 The world at one time brings forward by turn in the narrow course, the horses of honour and disgrace.
 The crafty fowler gives the bird grain, and then draws it into the noose of his artfully laid snare.
 One man who has lost all hope, gains honour,
 Another who is always hopeful in spite of all is disgraced.
 Strange is it if a man who has walked in the shadow of poverty should court a favour from the sun ?
 Be content, if you have a portion of wisdom, that the ignorant should be oppressed by the foolish
 What of that man who, in the assembly of mirth and merriment quaffs the wine of pleasure from the cup of luxuriousness ?
 What of him who sitting behind the wall of sorrow suffers from the after effects of sorrow and the worry of toil ?
 At last the hand of fate takes both of them straight off to the brink of the pit of death.
 Happy is the brave hearted man who like Sharaf draws the foot of fidelity beneath the skirt of retirement.

And in this year Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín left Alí Kirmáj¹ who was governor of Multán, as his Vicegerent in Lahore, and in the year 587 H. coming from Ghaznín he reduced the fort of Tabarhindah² which was the capital of the great rájas of Hindustán, and left Malik Ziáu-d-Dín Tukilí³ with a corps d'élite consisting of one thousand two hundred cavalry soldiers, and was contemplating a return. In the meantime Rái Pathúrú the Governor of Ajmír, and Khandí Rái his brother who had been Governor of Dehli before Pathúrú, arrived with a vast army at a place called Taráyan⁴ on the banks of the river Sarsuti at a distance of seven *krohis*⁵ from Thánesar. It is now known by the name of Taráwarí⁴ and is distant forty *krohs*⁵ from Dehli. A great conflict ensued with the Sultán and the Muslim troops were defeated. The Sultán evinced great bravery on the field of battle, and in that engagement also Khandí Rái who was mounted on an elephant at the head of his army, received a spear thrust in his mouth from the hand of the Sultán. The Sultán also was struck on the head by the Rái's spear, and his arm was also wounded but both escaped in safety. 50. The Sultán got off his horse and taking up his son Khilji upon his horse and mounting behind him took him off the field; the Sultán proceeded to Ghaznín, and Rái Pathúrú took the fortress of Tabarhindah from Ziáu-d-Dín Tukilí on peaceable terms after a

From Rennell's map in Tieffenthaler it would appear that the situation of the fortress of Tiberhind, which is there marked though not described in the text, was about half way between Bikanír and Jhunjhnú in Rajputáná, that is to say about 100 miles north of Ajmír.

siege of one year and one month. And in the year 588 H. the Sultán again came into Hindustán with a large and brave army of 40,000 cavalry, and divided his forces into four army corps, and having given battle time after time in the place above mentioned gained a victory. Pathúrá was taken prisoner and Khandí Rái having been overcome in battle was killed and hasted to his resting-place in Hell. The Sultán then having reduced the fortresses of Sarsutí¹ and Hánsí proceeded to Ajmír the capital of Pathúrá, reduced it and plundered its environs killing and taking prisoners. From certain other sources we learn that Hazrat Khwájá Mu'innu-d-Dín Chishtí² may God sanctify his heart, that revered one who is the fountain head of the great and holy men and the dignified elders of the land of Hind, whose blessed tomb is a place of pilgrimage situated in Ajmír, was at that time in the company of the Sultán, and this victory occurred through the impulse of the blessed and divine soul of that pillar of holiness. And in this year leaving Sultán Malik Qutbu-d-Dín Aibak who was his servant and adopted son and vicegerent in the town of Kúhrám which is distant seventy krohs from Dehli, he invaded and plundered the Siwálik range which lies to the North of Hindustán, and proceeded to Ghaznín. In the same year too Qutbu-d-Dín having captured Dehli took it away from the kinsmen of Pathúrá and Khandí Rái. Then in the year 589 H. (1193

The fort of Kol⁴ fell into the hands of Qutbu-d-Dín Aibak, and he made Dehli his capital and brought its surrounding districts under his sway. From that date Dehli once more became the metropolis of the Sultáns. The erection of minarets and other buildings of that kind, such as mosques, was

And in the year 593 H. he conquered Gujerát and took his army to Nahrwálá which is known as Pattan,³ and having taken vengeance for the Sultán on Bhím Rai Dev, and having taken much spoil returned; and in that year Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín removed his effects from the transitory world to the eternal abode,⁴ and Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín having heard this news when on the confines of Tús and Sarakhs,⁵ turned towards Bádghis and performed the duties of the mourning ceremonies and having divided his brother's dominions among his kindred⁶ came to Ghaznín and brought an army against Khwárazm, and on the first occasion Sultán Muḥammad Khwárazm Sháh suffered defeat, and the Sultán pursued him and fought the Khwárazmians at the head of an aqueduct which they had dug from the eastern bank of the Jaihún, and a number of the noted generals of Ghor were martyred and he could not take Khwárazm; he also fought a great battle with an army of Khitái⁷ kings of Turkistán who had come to the help of Sultán Muḥammad,¹ on the banks of the river Jaihún—he fought right bravely but at last was defeated, and being left with a hundred thousand cavalry soldiers he entered the fortress of Andkhúd where he entrenched himself, and 52.

having asked for quarter¹ returned to Ghaznín; and at that time the tribe of the Khúkhars in the neighbourhood of Lahore shewed symptoms of revolting the Sultán accordingly brought an army against them, and also summoned Qutbu-d-Dín Aibak from Dehlí, and having given the Khúkhars a severe lesson returned to Ghaznín, and while on the way back was martyred at Damyak,² which is the name of a village of the dependencies of Ghaznín, at the hands of Khúkhars bandits—the following qit'ah has been written to chronicle this event³ :—

The martyrdom of the king of sea and land Shihábu-d-Dín, Whose like has never yet been seen since the world began,
On the third day from the first of Sha'bán, in the year 602
Happened in the road to Ghaznín at the stage Damyak.

The days of his reign from the commencement of the rule of Ghaznín to the end of his life were thirty and two years and some months, and he left no heir save one daughter, but he left behind him much treasure of gold and silver and precious stones, among these latter were five hundred *mans*⁴ of diamonds jewels of great value, besides cash and estates and other property the value of which we may estimate on the same scale. He made expeditions to Hindústán nine times, twice was defeated and seven times was victorious.

Thou didst see Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám, who in war
Was stronger in heart and hand than Sám and Narímán

³ No author that I have seen records the name of the author. The Tabaqát-i-Násirí attributes it to "one of the learned men of that period."

⁴ The Tabriz man must be meant, being somewhat less than 2 lbs. while the man of Hindustán varies from 40 to 80 lbs. (Raverty).

The Ain-i-Akbari makes no mention of the man as a weight unit for jewels. Two sers are equal to half a man. As the ser was nearly two pounds this would make the man equal to eight pounds nearly. (See Ain-i-Akbari (Jarrett) II. 366 note 4).

The Tabaqát-i-Násirí says 1500 mans of diamonds.

He departed this world, and they say (the writer vouches for it)

That there remained of his secret treasure 500 mans of diamonds.

And in his reign many learned doctors and scientists and poets flourished, of whom was Imám Fakhr-u-d-Dín Rázi¹ may God be merciful to him who wrote the Latáif-i-Ghiyáti and other books in honour of his brother Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín Abú-l-Fatḥ. He remained with the army of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám, and every week used to stand up to preach, and at the termination of his sermon the Sultán used to evince great emotion, and since the Imám got very wearied of this continual coming and going, and everlasting service, one day addressing the Sultán from the pulpit he said Oh! Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín, some time hence neither will this greatness and glory of yours remain nor the flattery and hypocrisy of Rázi: The following qitaʿ is by him:

If an enemy does not agree with you O friend
If behoves you to agree with your enemy,
If not, then have patience for a few days
He will not remain, nor will you, nor the pride of Rázi.

And after the assassination of the Sultán certain mischief-makers out of envy accused the Imám of having conspired with the Fidáis,² and asserted that the Imám was well aware of their

See also Majmaʿul-Fusahá I. p. 274, where he is called Al-Quraishī at-Tamīmī, Ibn Khalliqán does not mention the Latáif-i-Ghiyáti among Ar-Rázi's works, while on the other hand Hájī Khalifa gives a work of this name but does not mention the author. His reference to it is as follows. "11124 El-Latáif El-Ghiyathiyeh, subtilitates Ghiyáth-ed-Dínī Liber persicus in quatuor partes divisus, quarum prima de principiis religionis, secunda de urisprudentiá, tertia de ethicá, quarta de precatione agit."

² The term Fidái is particularly applied to the disciples of the chief of the Muláhidah heretics, at whose hands Muizzu-d-Dín met his death according to the express statement of the author of the Tabaqát-i-Násiri. (See Raverty 435 note 3). This attempt to implicate Rázi in the responsibility for the murder is recorded also in the Jámiʿu-t-Tawárikh, and the Táju-l-Madsir. See Elliott II. p. 236.

hypocrisy. They made an attempt upon the Imám and he fled for refuge to Muaiyyidu-l-Mulk Sinjarí¹ who was one of the distinguished generals of the Sultán; he despatched him in safety to a place of security. A poet has written an ode in praise of him of which the following are two couplets.

Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Sháh Ghází whose sword in the world has become like the famous Zulfiqár² of Ali Murtazá.

The true Sultán Muḥammad Sám, he whose love for

² Zúl Fiqár. The following is extracted from Ibn Khalliqán (Slane) Vol. IV. p. 220.

"It is related that Hárún ar Rashíd on sending Yazíd ibn Mazyad against Al Walíd gave him Zúl Fakár the sword which had belonged to the Prophet "Take it, Yazid, by it you will be victorious." To this Muslim Ibn al-Walíd alludes in the following verse of a kasída composed by him in praise of Yazíd:

'You caused the Prophet's sword to recollect his way of acting and the bravery displayed by the first (Musalmán) who ever prayed and fasted.'

By these last words he meant Alí the son of Abú Talib for he was the person who dealt blows with it."

Lower down, quoting as his authority Hishám ibn al Kalbi, Ibn Khalliqán states that Zúl Fiqár belonged to Al-Aási son of Nabih, both of whom were killed, in the battle of Badr; Al-Aási being slain by 'Alí who took the famous sword from him—and he continues "Another author says that Zúl Faqár was given to 'Alí by the Prophet." I must observe that faqár with an a after the f is the plural of Faqára which means a vertebra of the back. The name of this sword is also pronounced Zúl Fiqár the word fiqár is the plural of fiqra (Vertebra).

At Tabarí states that Zúl fiqár came into the possession of Hárún ar Rashíd in the following manner:

"Zul fiqár was borne by Muḥammad Ibn Abd Allah ibn al Hasan ibn al Hasan ibn Alí ibn Abí Tálíb on the day in which battle was given to the army of Abú Ja'far al-Manḡúr the Abbaside; when he felt death to be near he gave Zúl fiqár to a merchant who had followed him, and to whom he owed four hundred dinárs 'Take this sword,' said he, 'any member of the Abú Tálíb family whom you may meet with will buy it from you and give you the sum to which you are entitled. The sword remained with the merchant till the Abbaside prince Ja'far the son of Sulaimán ibn Alí ibn Abd Allah ibn al Abbás ibn Abd-al-Muttalib obtained the governments of Yemen and

Another poet says :—

The Emperor of the age, Khusrau Ghází Muizzu-d-Dín
From whom the glory of crown and diadem gains increase,
The origin of victory, Muḥammad ibn Sám ibn Husain
His very presence has become the mark for princely glory.¹

And Názukí Marághai too says in praise of him :—

Sháh Muizzu-d-Dín before whose princely might
The heaven stands girt like a bunch of flowers
He came to the throne like a rose at the time when The heaven brought the Sun into the Balance.²

Medipa, and he purchased it from the merchant for four hundred dínáris. From him it passed to al-Mahdí the Son of Al Manşúr (Khalifah from 775 A.H. to 785 A.H.) from him to Músa al Hádi and from Músa to his brother Hárún ar Rashíd.³

Al Asmái relates that he saw Hárún ar Rashíd at Túš wearing a sword and that he said "Asmái would you like to see Zúl fiqár" and on Asmái expressing a wish to see it Hárún ar Rashíd bade him draw the sword—on doing so he found on it eighteen faqáras—The word faqára is said in a note to the above to designate "a sort of waving ornament on the blade or else a notch on its edge. It is doubtful which is meant probably the latter."

The word Zúlfiqár meaning vertebrated I think it quite possible that the sword in question was so called from its strength and pliability, the vertebral column being the type of the combination of these two somewhat incompatible elements.

Subsequently it was called Zwýs (the yoke) by the Latins Jugum and was first formally called Libra in the Calendar of Julius Cæsar. This name seems to have been derived from the East, and must be regarded as a symbol of equality introduced into the heavens at the period when the entrance of the sun into that constellation marked the Autumnal Equinox. "In the commentary of Theon on the Almagest Libra is frequently represented by Alra (a pound) or Alrasa, a word originally borrowed by the Romans from the Sicilians, transformed into Libra and then restored to the later Greeks in the new sense of a balance." See Smith's (D. G. R. A.) p. 151, also Asn-i-Akbari (Jarrett) III. p. 13 and notes. Also Albirúní (Sachau) p. 173, where a table is given of the signs in seven languages. Sir William Jones (Jones' Works Vol. I. p. 334) leans to the opinion that "both Greeks and Hindus received their divisions of the Zodiac from an older nation" and there can be little doubt that this was the case; the almost absolute identity of the nomenclature in Arabic, Greek, Persian, Syriac, Hebrew and Sanskrit points to a pictorial rather than to a verbal original, the more so as in the case of a pictorial symbol of ambiguous shape it was possible for the name to differ in different languages. Thus we know that the sign Libra was first known as χῆλαι to the Greeks from its resemblance to the claws of a scorpion, then this name was changed to ζυγός from the resemblance to a yoke, and finally called Libra a balance.

The same pictorial idea is applicable to all three words, and it is more than probable that we must look, for the origin of the Zodiac, to the same source whence we trace the origin of our Alphabet.

SULTÁN QUTBU-D-DÍN AIBAK

Who was one of the specially favourite servants of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín, on the occasion of an eclipse of the moon had a broken little finger,² and was known by this soubriquet (Aibak), they also call him Qutbu-d-Dín³ Lak bak⁴sh. With the consent of the nobles of Hindústán he established himself as Protector of the kingdom of Dehlí, and after the martyrdom of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín his brother's son, Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín Maḥmúd, the rightful heir of Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín Muḥammad in whose praise they wrote the following verse:—

¹ His full titles were: Sultán al-A'zam, Muizzu-d-Dunya wa-d-Dín Abul Muzaffar Muḥammad. On his death difficulties arose as to the succession, the Turkoman generals claiming it for Ghiyásu-d-Dín Maḥmúd, son of Ghiyásu-d-Dín, while the chiefs of Ghúr on the other hand favoured the claims of Bahánu-d-Dín Sám, and a quarrel arose between the two parties as to the route to be taken in conducting the corpse of Muizzu-d-Dín to Ghaznín. Eventually this was settled by the diplomacy of the Khwája Muaiyyidu-l-Mulk. Táju-d-Dín Yaldkuz (Yaldúz) came out to meet the body, which was buried in an enclosed grave which he had built for his daughter, on the 22nd Sha'bán (Firishta).

² This is the reading of the text and of both MSS. and it serves in a measure to correct the current idea as to the etymology of the name Ibak. Raverty (514, note 1) states that Ibak in Turkish means finger. This does not appear to be the case, so far as I can learn from dictionaries ايبك means the comb of a cock, while the word finger is پرمق parmaq. On the other hand the word اي ay means moon and بك beg or beḡ means Lord. Whether the finger was broken at the time of the eclipse, or whether it was a congenital defect does not appear, but from the text before us the connection with the moon is the cause of the name, not, as has been said, the broken finger. See also Raverty loc. cit. and Thomas' Pathán kings of Dehli, page 32, note 1. Firishta however distinctly states رجون انگشت خنصر او شکسته بود اورا ايبک if his text is correct.

having sent to Malik Quṭbu-d-Din from Firoza Koh the canopy and insignia of royalty, addressed him by the title of Sultán,¹ and in the year 602 H. (1295 A.D.) having come from Dehlí to Láhore on Tuesday, the sixteenth of the month of ZuQa'dah in the aforesaid year, ascended the throne of empire and became proverbial for his kindness and clemency. He used to bestow upon deserving recipients rewards far in excess of their anticipations, and inaugurated his custom of lak bakhshí (bestowing laks). One of the learned men of the time named Baháu-d-Dín Ushí² said in praise of him.

Quatrain.

Oh thou that hast brought into the world the bestowal of laks;

Thy hand has brought the mine into great straits;
From envy of thy liberality the heart of the mine has seized blood drops,

And placed them forward pretending that they are rubies.

And after some time enmity arose between him and Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, who was one of the slaves of Muizzu-d-Dín and had read the Khuṭba in his own name in Ghaznín, on account of Láhore, and the fire of war and conflict blazed forth on the confines of the Punjáb; Táju-d-Dín was defeated, and went to Kirmán which was his usual abode. Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín went and took possession of the fort of Ghaznín and staying there for a period of forty days, spent his time in rioting and wantonness and dissipation. Accordingly the people of Ghaznín were annoyed at his behaviour and secretly summoned Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, who arrived without warning, and Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín not being able to oppose him came to Láhore by way of Sárg Surákh³

² Baháu-d-Dín Muḥammad Ushí Farḡhání was a very famous preacher and learned divine, very famous according to Uffí as an extempore speaker, and an extremely able poetry and prose writer. (Majma'u-l-Fuṣṣah, I. 172).

³ One of the routes between Ghaznín and the Punjab, for he did not dare to take that through Kirmán (Raverty, 527, note). The Tabaqát-i-Náṣirí omits all reference to this, and merely mentions Quṭbu-d-Dín's death without saying where his fatal accident happened. As to the exact date of his death, see Raverty 528, note 2.

Verse.

When the head of a Sultán becomes unsteady from wine
Without warning the crown of Empire falls from his head.

And after wielding power for some time he fell from his horse when playing chaugán at Láhore in the year 607 H., and died¹ and was buried in that city and his tomb is at present the resort of pilgrims. The period of his reign after the conquest of Hindustán, was twenty years, out of which period he was for four years a Sultán.

This ancient revolving heaven has overthrown many heroes ;
So far as you are able, place no reliance on the sun and moon and Jupiter.²

Seven other individuals of the generals and slaves of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín reached princely power in Hindústán and Ghaznín and Bengála and other places, whose affairs are written in their proper places ; among others Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz on the confines of Taráyan, otherwise known as Taráwarí, having fought with Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín Iyaltamish was taken prisoner. Another is Sultán Náşiru-d-Dín Qabácha³ who is also one of the slaves of Muizzu-d-Dín, and had married one of the daughters of Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, the other daughter was married to Sultán Qutbu-d-

² In the 'Ajáibu-l-Makhlúqát of Qazwíní we find that the astrologers considered the sun as holding the place of king, and the stars are his courtiers and troops. The moon is his Vazír and Jupiter the Qázi. The planet is considered to be a very fortunate one by astrologers who called it سعد أكبر. The moon is also lucky so much so that everything lucky was called by the Hindús Somagraha, Soma being the Sanskrit word for moon. The sun was called 'Aditya,' i.e., the beginning as being the origin of all things. See Albíruni (Sachau) i. 217 and seqq.

Dín and Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín during his lifetime had bestowed upon him the governorship of Uchh and Multán. After the death of Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín, he brought the whole country from Uchh¹ to Sarsutí and Kührám under his own rule, and also took possession of Lahore, and having fought with the army of Malik Táju-d-Dín who was on his way from Ghaznín, Khwája Mu'ayyidu-l-Mulk Sinjarí² being in command of that army, was defeated and went to Sindh in which country he obtained great ascendancy.

In the year 611 H. (1214 A. D.) a Moghul army arrived and laid siege to Multán for forty days and the Sultán Náşiru-d-Dín, having opened the doors of the treasury, evinced great bravery and warded off their attacks, and at last after a reign of twenty-two years fell a prisoner into the hands of Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín and trod the way to the next world.³ Another is Malik Baháu-d-Dín Tughral, when Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám reduced the fortress of Bahankar⁴ he entrusted the command of it to Malik Baháu-d-Dín Tughral, and he having built a fortress in the country of Bhasiyána⁵ elected to reside there⁶ and used continually to

According to Ṭabaqát-i-Náşirí he was drowned while trying to escape. See Raverty 542-543, notes. cf. Elliott II. 304.

⁴ Both MSS., but according to Ṭabaqát-i-Náşirí and Alfí the name of the fort was Thankír or Thangír. (See however Raverty 544 note 1).

⁵ MS. (B) has Bhasiyána, MS. (A) has Bhayána. Ṭabaqát-i-Náşirí says "the fortress of Thankír which is in the territory of Bhiána." This fortress he built was called Sultán Kot (Ṭabaqát-i-Náşirí).

Tieffenthaler mentions a place which he calls Beána and says, concerning it, Beána était autrefois une ville bien peuplée, aujourd'hui le nombre de ses habitans est fort diminué, après que le Rajáh Indou en a chassé, il n'y a que peu d'années, les Mahometans, Afgans, et Saïdes, qui se vantent de descendre de la race d'Alí. Elle est au pied des montagnes, à 14 milles communs de Fatepour au Sud-Ouest.

He mentions no fortress named Thankír or Bahankar nor does he mention Sultán Kot.

harass the environs of Gwáliár, and Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín at the time of his return from Gwáliár had promised to give that fortress to Malik Baháu-d-Dín who accordingly strongly fortified a position at a distance of two krohs from Gwáliár and harassed the garrison of the fort, so that after a year the garrison sending messengers and presents invited Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín and surrendered the fort to him. On this account enmity arose between Malik Quṭbu-d-Dín and Baháu-d-Dín. Malik Baháu-d-Dín died a short time afterwards.¹

Another is Malik Muḥammad Bakhtiyár Ghúrí.² He was one of the great men of Ghúr and Garmsír, a man adorned with all good qualities who came to Ghaznín in the reign of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín and from thence went to Hindústán. He did not approve of having to live in Láhore with Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín, and joined hands with Malik Husainu-d-Dín Ughlál Beg³ ruler of the country between the two rivers (The Doáb) and the country beyond the river Ganges, and Kanpilah and Patiáli⁴ were allotted as his reward. He proceeded to Oudh and conquered that coun-

² Called also Muḥammad Bakhtiyár Khiljī, the first to lead a Musulmán invasion of Bengal in 596 A. H. He belonged to the Khilj tribe of Ghúr, a Turkish tribe. Regarding him the Ain-i-Akbari states that the astrologers had predicted the overthrow of the kingdom of Nadiya by Muḥammad Bakhtiyár Khiljī. He destroyed the city of Nadiya (in 1203 A. D, 600 A. H.) and transferred the Capital to Lakhnauti. From that time Bengal has been subject to the kings of Delhi. Ain-i-Akbari (Jarrett) II. 148.

He was a nephew of Muḥammad son of Maḥmūd. (See Tabaqat-i-Nasiri 549): Raverty denies his having ever been a slave but from the statement in the text there seems to be no doubt that the author so regarded him. (See Raverty, p. 550 note 6).

He then brought many presents to the court of the Sultán, and received great favours and distinctions; the grandees of the court seeing they were powerless against him, became envious of him, and instigated the Sultán to such an extent that one day he made him fight with a rogue elephant,² but he struck the elephant so hard upon the trunk with a heavy club that the elephant turned and fled. The Sultán was overwhelmed with astonishment to see this, and nominated and appointed him ruler of the whole country of Lakhnauti³ in Bengála and sent him away. In the second year after this arrangement Muḥammad Bakhtiyár brought an army from Behár towards Lakhnauti and arrived at the town of Núdiyá⁴ with a small force, Núdiyá is now in ruins. ¹ For an account of the birth of Lakhmaniya see Ṭabaqát-i-Akbari which relates that in order to delay the birth for two hours his mother caused herself to be suspended head downwards with her legs bound together till the auspicious moment predicted by the astrologers to ensure his reigning for eighty years arrived, immediately after delivery of her child the mother died. (see also Raverty Ṭabaqát-i-Nasiri, p. 555).

² There is no authority for the statement that Gaur was ever known by the name of Muḥammad Bakhtyār. Concerning the name Gaur see Hunter Imp. Gaz. Gaur.

As to this passage see Raverty 559 note 3. See Thomas Pathán Kings of Delhi p. 37 and p. 110, and notes. It appears unlikely that Muḥammad Bakhtyār issued coins in his own name, as he was nothing more than Sipahsálar of the Sultán Muizzu-d-Din Muḥammad Sáim: moreover no such coins are known.

- here crossed their route called the Brahmanputr,¹ which they also call Brahmkadī. It is three or four times the size of the Ganges. Sháh Garshasp † when he came to Hindustán built a bridge over that river, and crossed it at Kámrúd and went on his way. Muḥammad Bakhtiyár crossed by that bridge, and leaving certain of his trusted generals to protect the bridge and command the road, entered the territory of Tibet, and spent ten days among the mountains and difficult roads, and at last arrived at a plain in mountain tribes between Lakhnautí and Tibbat the Kúch-Mij-and Tihárú who are all of Turkish countenance (همه تركی چهره اند) and speak a language differing both from that of India and that of Tibbat, adopted the religion of Islám and agreed to act as guide to Muḥammad Bakhtiyár whom he conducted to a place where there is a city called Mardhan Kot (or Bardhan kot) .. in front of which flows a vast river called the Bang Matí and when it enters the country of Hindustán they style it Samundar in the Hindí dialect; in magnitude, width, and depth it is three times the size of the Ganges.

From this point the account differs, the Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣirí says that they journeyed up the river for ten days among the mountains till they came to an old bridge built of hewn stone, &c.

Our text on the other hand states that they crossed the old bridge immediately on reaching the river after which they journeyed for ten days in the mountains, &c.

Badáoní's statement has more prima facie probability, the statements of the Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣirí moreover are somewhat confused and contradictory. Neither author mentions how long the cavalry force took to reach Bardhan.

It seems fairly certain from Badáoní's account that the city of Bardhan was on the near side of the river and that the crossing of the river was impracticable at that point, how far it was from Kámrúd, where Badáoní says they crossed by the bridge; does not appear.

MS. (A) ابردين Abardín; MS. (B) ابردهن Abardhan.

Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣirí says Bardhan (Raverty 561 note 8). Calcutta text has مردهن كوط.

† Ṭabaqát calls this river the Beg-Matí (see Raverty 561 note 1.)

For a full discussion of the identity of the river crossed and the place of crossing see Raverty pp 561-565. The only additional information given by the text is that the bridge was at Kámrúd, and it seems not impossible that it may be the bridge of Sil Hako and the river the Brahmaputra though Raverty thinks it was the Teesta.

which was a fort of great strength: the garrison of that fort who were descendants of Gushtasp (that fort too was one of the buildings erected by Gushtasp) came forth to fight, and fought so bravely till nightfall that many men were lost on the side of Muḥammad Bakhtyār. He pitched his camp on that very spot, and coming down received tidings that five farsangs beyond this city there was another city¹ from which 50,000 Turks all warlike and ready for battle would come to the relief of their city. The following day Muḥammad Bakhtyār not thinking it advisable to remain there, and not being able to oppose them, turned back and came to the head of the bridge. Before his arrival the Generals in charge of the road had fought among themselves, and the infidels had broken two arches of that bridge. The army of Muḥammad Bakhtyār had this bridge in front and the infidels kept coming up in their rear, and fought with determined bravery. In that neighbourhood there was an idol temple of great strength.² They passed the night there by some stratagem, and in the morning a ford was found, and a party of men who crossed by the ford found the sand of the river was a sort of quicksand, and the water of the river gradually growing deeper and deeper, the greater part of the soldiers of Muḥammad Bakhtyār were drowned in the ocean of destruction, and the remnant which remained became fuel for the fire of the infidel's sword and attained the exaltation of martyrdom. Muḥammad Bakhtyār, out of many thousand men, arrived at Deo Kot with some three or four hundred only, and fell ill from vexation and was attacked by hectic fever³ and used to say "no doubt Sulṭān Muḥammad Muizz-ud-Din Sām has met with an accident that fortune has gone so against me." And when weakness took possession of him 'Alī Mardān one of Muḥammad Bakhtyār's greatest generals arrived at Deo Kot from the district of Nārnālī⁴ and finding him bedridden, pulled down the sheet from his face and ruthlessly despatched him with one blow of a dagger. This event happened in the year '602 H. after the death of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín: and after the death of Sultán Qatbu-d-Dín this same Alí Mardán eventually seized the reins of power by great craft, and promulgating the khutba and sikka of Lakhnauti in his own name was styled Sultán Aláu-d-Dín, and from the excessive folly and pride and arrogance of his mind sat quietly in Lakhnauti and divided the country of Irán and Túrán among his adherents, and no one dared to say "these dominions are outside the scope of the Sultán's power why do you divide them?" They say that some unfortunate merchant laid a complaint of poverty before Aláu-d-Dín, who asked "where does this fellow come from?" They answered "from Iṣfahán" then he ordered them to write a document to Iṣfahán which should have the force of an assignment of land to him. The merchant would not accept this document, but the Vazírs did not dare to represent this fact and reported "the ruler of Iṣfahán, by reason of his travelling expenses and assembling his retinue for the purpose of subjugating that country, is in difficulties." He thereupon ordered them to give a large sum of money far beyond his expectations; and when his tyranny and oppression exceeded all bounds the Amírs of Khilj consenting together put him to death and raised to the throne Malik Husámu-d-Dín Khiljí who was one of the nobles of Khilj and Garmsír and one of the servants of Muḥammad Bakhtyár. The reign of Alí Mardán lasted thirty-two years.²

Another was Malik Husáinu-d-Dín³ abovementioned who became possessed of the whole country of Tirhut and Bengála and Jájnagar and Kámrúd and gained the title of Sultán Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín, till in the months of the year 622 H., he sent to the Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín Iyaltimish thirty-eight head of elephants and

The duration of his reign was twelve years.⁵ The mention of these few kings of the regions of Hindustán incidentally with the affairs of the Sultáns of Dehlí was both opportune and necessary, and the affairs of the remaining Muizzíyeh kings who attained to the Sultānat of Multán and other kingdoms are mentioned in other places.

Iyaltimish or Altamish as he is generally called was the first sovereign who reigned in Dehli with independent power. He received a diploma of investiture from the Khalif of Baghdád [Al-Mustansir b-illáh, A. born under these circumstances Iyaltimish.¹ His father was the chief of many of the tribes of Turkestan. His kinsmen under pretence of taking him for a walk took Iyaltimish into a garden and sold him like Joseph to a merchant, from there he happened to be taken to Bokhárá, and thence in the time of Sultán Muḥammad Sám to Ghaznín; and in these days Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín after the conquest of Nahrwálah and the taking of Gujráť had gone to Ghaznín, and since without permission of Sultán Muḥammad Sám no one could purchase Iyaltimish he asked permission from the Sultán to sell him. Sultán Muḥammad Sám said that since he had given orders that no one there should buy that slave they were to take him to Dehli and sell him there. Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín after his return from Ghaznín bought a slave named Ibak, a namesake of his own, and Iyaltimish, at Dehli for 100,000 tangahs: at first he called him Amir Tamghách,² and appointed him to the Amírship of Tabarhindah,³ and at the time when Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín fought with Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, Ibak his slave, tasted the cup of death. At that time he made Iyaltimish an especial favourite, and after the capture of Gwáliár he made him Governor of that place, and subsequently bestowed upon him the rule of Baran⁴ and its environs, and since he began to shew signs of extraordinary hardiness he entrusted the country of Badáún to him, and in the war of Muizzu-d-Dín with the Khúkhars (as has been already related), Iyaltimish having got together a huge army from Badáon and the foot of the hills, joined hands with Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín in the service of Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín, and armed as he was having forced his horse into the river⁵ engaged the enemy bravely several times: Sultán Muizzu-d-Din bestowed on him fitting honours and distinguished him royally and gave him high recommendations to Malik Qutbu-d-Din, and went to the greatest possible lengths in his care for him; and that same day Malik Qutbu-d-Din wrote his letter of emancipation, and by degrees raised him to the dignity of Amír-ul-Umará (Chief of the Amírs) till his affairs reached the height they did. And in the beginning of his reign certain of the Muizziyeh and Qutbiyeh Amirs rebelled against him and suffered punishment and became food for the pitiless sword. And Malik Táju-d-Din Yaldúz after he had suffered defeat by the Army of Khwárazm obtained possession of Lahore; Sultán Shamsu-d-Din coming from Delhi to meet him in the year 612 H. drew up in battle order on the confines of Taráyan which is known as Serái Taláwarí.¹ After a severe battle Sultán Táju-d-Din Yaldúz being defeated fell a prisoner into the hands of Shamsu-d-Din who sent him to Badáon. The bird of his soul there escaped from the prison house of the body and took its flight to the nest of the next world. His tomb is in that city.

¹ Concerning the origin of the name see Thomas, p. 44, note 1. The note is too long to transcribe here, but briefly it may be said that Mr. Redhouse to whom the above text was submitted by Mr. Thomas thinks it probable that owing to errors of transcribers of the Turkish compound word الشمس has become displaced and that the word should really be written ايتنلمش ay-tutulmash = eclipse of the moon.

This explanation seems most plausible. In Turkí the word الشمس altamsh means the advanced guard of an army, or the number sixty.

64. And in the year 614 H. Sultán Shamsu-d-Din came into conflict with Sultán Náşiru-d-Din Qabácha who had married the two daughters of Sultán Qutbu-d-Din one after the other, and was in possession of Uchh and Multán, and victory rested with Sultán Shamsu-d-Din, and for the third time² Sultán Shamsu-d-Din went up in person against him. He, having fortified the castle of Uchh, himself went to the fortress of Bhankar, and Nizámul-Mulk Wazír Jandí pursued him while the Sultán reduced Uchh. After hearing the news of the capture of Uchh, Náşiru-d-Din sent his own son Bahrám Sháh into the presence of the Sultán and sued for peace. Bhankar also was captured. And in the year 615 H. Náşiru-d-Din was overwhelmed in the sea of destruction in the Punjáb, and surrendered the property of life to the flood of death, and the Sultán turning back came to Delhi. In the year 618 H. Sultán Shamsu-d-Din raised an army against Sultán

Jalálu-d-Dín Mangburní¹ son of Khwárazm Sháh who having suffered defeat at the hands of Changíz Khán after Tájú-d-Dín, came to Ghaznín and thence from fear of the incursions of Changíz Khán had gone to Lahore with his family and relations; and Sultán Jalálu-d-Dín not being able to withstand him went towards Sindh and Siwistan and from there by way of Kuch and Makrán arrived at Kirmán and Iráq.²

And in the year 622 H.³ Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín, took an army towards Behár and Lakhnautí and brought Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín Khiljí, who has been before mentioned, into obedience, and having accepted the present above mentioned,⁴ established the khutba and sikka in his own name⁵ and having given his elder son the title of Sultán Násiru-d-Dín Maḥmúd⁶ made him his heir, and having made over that country to him returned to the metropolis of Delhi. Eventually Malik Násiru-d-Dín Maḥmúd having fought with Ghiyásu-d-Dín on the confines of Lakhnautí got the upper hand, and having taken him prisoner put him to death, and great booty fell into his hands which he divided into portions and sent it as rewards⁷ to each of the nobles of Dehlí. 65.

¹ So called because of a mole which he had on his nose (Raverty 285, note 3). He was the last of the Khwarazm Sháhi dynasty. He is said to have turned devotee and to have lived till 688 H (Raverty 290, note.) There is some question as to the orthography of this name. Thomas p. 90, note 1, judging from inscriptions on his coins calls him Mankbarnin, as he considers the final letter to be ن n not ی y. The etymology given above is probably correct as the word مینگ (meng) in Turkí means grain de beauté while بورون means "nez" (Dict. Turk. Orientale Pavet-de Courteille) the word originally being مینگبورون mengbúrún would in Persian have become altered in pronunciation to منگیرن mangburun and with the addition of the yá-i-nisbat منگیرنی Mangburní.

It is a well known story that Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín was a man of a cold temperament, and once upon a time he desired to consort with a pretty and comely girl, but found that he had not the power. The same thing happened several times : one day the girl was pouring some oil on the head of the Sultán and shed some tears upon the Sultán's head. He raised his head and asked the cause of her weeping, after a great deal of hesitation she answered : I had once a brother who was bald like you and that reminded me of him, and I wept. Lord of the world on him be peace, remains concealed as by a curtain—men speak and write less concerning them, nay more they do not even possess them—accordingly in harmony with the saying, The first comer has the best of it, I have thought it incumbent upon me to include a few odes from that eminent author as a benediction and blessing, in this composition of mine, and to leave a memorial for his friends, and to establish my own connection with the master, and to display upon the dāis of evidence the excellencies of that doughty knight of the arena of eloquence, and more especially to fulfil the demands of fellow-citizenship. The master poet Shihāb¹ Muḥamra [Badāoni] then says as follows :—

I am Alif in the table of existence and of no value as a sign.²

My existence depends upon the duration of the existence of others, my own existence is transitory.

I stand at the end of the row³ in the hope of obtaining a better position, having rested from all movement with the attributes of insignificance.

I have not the attributes of Alif for Alif has no crookedness.⁴

All my writing has become crooked on the page of desire.

There is the song of the nightingale, the rose is happy ; while

I am careless like the lily.⁵

² Alif stands for 1, in the numerical value of letters, and is looked upon as having no intrinsic value, but merely serving as the 'starting place or origin for other numbers.

In its literal value also it is ساکن بالذات that is, it has no capability of being pronounced till it is compounded with some other sign such as ⁶ hamza.

³ Alif must stand at the end either of a word as in بقا baqā, or a syllable as in قامت qāmat. The Alif at the commencement has a hamza.

⁴ MSS. (A), (B) کز بنی ندرد

⁵ The lily is said by the poets not to be affected by the song of the nightingale and to remain speechless, cf. Hāfiḡ.

حیفست بلبلِ چو من اندر چنین چمن

با این لسان عذب که خامش چو سوسنم

Pity it is that such a nightingale as I living in such a garden and having so sweet a tongue should be silent as the lily.

Like Alif I have no tongue, what have I to do with ten tongues¹ ?

Since I can seize it² while thus at rest, Why should I pursue ?

Since I cannot see openly how can I follow a hidden path ?

By stratagem, I can recognize no distinction between earth and heaven, although I am like the heaven in my whirling, and like the earth stationary.

I am not like water in freshness, nor like fire in sublimity, nor like the wind in sweetness, nor like the earth in heaviness.

¹ The ten tongues of the lily are of frequent mention in Persian poetry, cf. Hâfiz.

بسسان سوسن اگر ده زبان شود حافظ
چو غنچه پیش تویش مهر بردهن باشد

Were Hâfiz like the lily endowed with ten tongues
His lips in thy presence would remain sealed like the lips of the rosebud.

The lily Sūsān is of four varieties. The white variety is called Sūsān-i-āzād, see Burhān-i-qāṭi s. v. سوسن; according to the Baḥrū-l-jawāhir its properties are those of heat and dryness and it is useful in the headaches of fever.

The Makḥzanu-l-adwīya states that the word Sūsān is an Arabicised form of the Syrian Sūsānī. The article may be consulted for further information regarding the varieties and properties of these lilies. The linear leaves of the lily are compared to tongues.

I am not made out of these four elements.¹ I am composed of the effluvia of the kennel. The refuse of the sewer water has boasted of piety.²

My wisdom, as though incarnate, seems to have taken to praise my faults; my avarice,³ huge as a mountain, has girded its loins for taking presents.

I am become fixed in the way of avarice, not a sign of truth remains in me. The oppression of my vices has overwhelmed the mercies of the Sacred Book.

My greediness has so deceived me that the five sensual appetites have taken away from my heart with disgrace the blessings of the readings⁴ of the 'ashars.

My inner nature as well as my body is devoid of meditation and recollection. My eye like my ear is inclined to the singing women and their songs.

I desire brilliant speeches to fall from my tongue which is like a well-tempered sword. My pen has made me bent like a sickle⁵ in the pursuit of my daily bread.

My speech has failed me because its glory was in the relation of this story. Yes! all this loss of honour was owing to inordinate desire for bread.

I am that mean one, less than the least, who am not worth a groat,⁶ if you think me worth a barleycorn, you will not buy me for nothing.

Oh Shihāb it is strange that you in this ro- of kingly affairs

You are not an angel, nor are you a devil, from what workshop are you? You are not a sojourner nor yet a traveller, from what court are you?

Your heart and intellect are careless of the tortures of the grave, you have dressed yourself in Gūrkhānī silk. ³

You have become utterly regardless from lust, owing to desire 73.
for license, from urgent desire, by means of false accusation you have planted the foot of success.

Sorrow for the tulip-cheeked beloved has shut fast the door of your wisdom. The vein of your eye has shed blood from desire for the cup of red wine.

You are corrupt like the wind, you stand paralysed like the earth.

You are a pearl of transitory existence, a shell empty-mouthed.
With breath like the burning lightning you are the enchanter of bad and good: with heart like a flint, you are the whetstone of dry and moist.

Naturally with desire you revolve like the sky in its figure-designing, from your youth hasting with greed, you are like a child in weakness.

You carry the sorrow of the seven (heavens) and the four (elements) in your heart, and every moment from pride you are put to a hundred thousand devices in the performance of one genuflection.

You are as coarse as the earth, and yet your speech is always of the moon in the heavens; you will not reach ⁴ the dignity of a king from the station of a doorkeeper.

⁴ MS. A. برسی I prefer نرسی as in the text.

You yourself owing to frivolity have not attained even for a moment, freeing yourself from the imperfections of the world, to the religious duties at stated times.

From the advice of the holy men may you be informed at least once, that in these two worlds at any rate ¹ you are famous for creating dissensions.

Perversity springs from your heart as pride springs from foolishness. Evil arises from your body as rashness does from youth.

You are the moisture of the gullet of hypocrisy, the blast of the forge of tyranny, you are the flower of the garden of inordinate desire, and the mud which befouls the reservoir of the soul.

74. When present you melt the soul, perchance you spring from the heat of Tamūz²; in your ode you scatter snow³ perchance you are of the breath of autumn.

You like a child seek throughout your life after vain images; from your fancifulness the sorrows of time have made you old in your youth.

Poetry is but a desire, and its metre is like the mirage which is void of water. This breath of life is grief to me, but its savour is better than the water of life.

When your desire becomes collected that fancy becomes enjoyment, when your breathing is harmonious, it becomes a scatterer of pearls.

How long this desire of the imagination? make one breath pearl-scattering in praise of that man whose equal wisdom has not seen even from the beginning.

² Tamūz. The fourth month of the Jewish year originally sacred to the god Tammūz; see Ezekiel viii. 14 "and behold there sat women weeping for Tammūz," Tammūz was a deity of the Phœnicians called by the Greeks and Romans Adonis. The word signifies "dissolution" or "diffidence" see Gesenius s. v. תַּמְזָר. See also Albirūnī's Chronology, (Sachan) pp. 68-82. Tammūz was coincident with the sun's position in Cancer which is called the horoscope of the world because by its creation the creation of the four elements became complete, and by their becoming complete all growth became complete (Albirūnī) Corresponds to our July, the hottest month of the Persian summer.

The King of the throne of "Kun"¹ is Muḥammad who pitched the tent of dignity by the side of the door of the Protector (God) from the house of Ummahānī.²

He was a mortal of angelic beauty, a sky with the lowliness of earth. Like the sky he was pure in body, like the Angels he was pure in soul.

He was a pearl whose place was in the treasury of God, and he was a moon whose brightness shone forth from the sky of eternity.

He was such a pearl that nothing of more value than his nature was ever produced by the medium of the elements from the sea of heaven.

He was such a moon that in every early morning the face of the star of Yaman became black as coal³ from shame at his cornelian-like lips.

The following Qaṣīda also he wrote, imposing upon himself the necessity of introducing the words "hair" and "ant," in a declaration of the unity of God and in praise of the Prophet, may the peace of God be upon him.

Although with my tongue, I split hairs at the time of discourse, still in the praise of God, by reason of amazement, I am dumb as the ant. 76.

¹ And in the pursuit of the fairy-faced ones with chainlike locks, through desire often have I bound fast, like the ant, my life to my waist with my heart.

And for the sake of the ant-eyed and sugar-lipped ones, in my fancy I have bored the hair of speech a hundred ways by way of trial.

That I might have a store like the ant,² in his praise I have cleft the hair into halves, and have not received one jot from any one in recognition.

Henceforth, like the ant, I will gird my loins at the door of the Incomparable one, and from the root of each hair,³ with a hundred tongues will I proclaim his gracious aid.

How can I open my lips, I that am voiceless as an ant and a fish. Nay rather will I make each hair a tongue to scatter pearls.

With this ant-like writing and these sugar-like words,⁴ by means of poetical arrangement I will split the hair in the declaration of the unity of God the discernor of secrets.

That God to whose workmanship each several hair bears witness, and all that exists, ant and fish and snake, wild beasts and birds, men and genii.⁵

The intellect herein cannot understand, even by a hair's breadth, the reason why the offspring of the powerful lion should become the prey of the powerless ant.

In his decree there is not the space of a hair's point open to criticism, even though he should give the kingdom of a Solomon to an ant without recompense.²

By his decree, the shape of the ant and the lion are similar, and by his art the colour of hair and bone are opposites.

By his grace it is that every hair has knowledge of him, and from his equity it comes to pass that there is a ⁵ guardian over every ant, that ³ dust in the palm is endowed with chemical properties, and water in the sea becomes converted into pearl;⁴ that the ant appears to the eye as a dragon, and a hair of the limbs as a spear.⁵

¹ It is said that the ants attack the newly born lion cub as yet unprotected by hair and kill it. The Arabs call the ant ابو مشغل Father Busy and أم نبرة Mother Turnabout, and have some curious legends about them and regard them with somewhat of superstitious awe. They say that to see in a dream ants entering a house betokens prosperity to its owner, while to see ants crawling on the carpet betokens prolific offspring. The appearance of flying ants in a house where there is a sick person betokens his death, and on no account, they say, should ants be permitted to crawl over any one lying sick (Haiātu-l-Haiwā). They say also that the ant has no stomach, and that it lives upon the air it breathes, and that it never sleeps.

It is used as a dessert by the Persians by whom it is regarded as an exhilarant, and as clearing the voice. Its wood is soft and light. [The article from which the above is extracted may be consulted for an account of its properties].

The Burḥān-i-Qāṭi states that a drink is made from the flowers which relieves the after effects of drinking, and the ashes of the burnt wood are used as a hair dye and hair restorer.

³ This story is related as follows in the Haiātu-l-Qulūb;—

One day the Prophet was sitting alone when an Arab came who had caught a lizard and had it in his sleeve. He asked the people who that was sitting there, they answered God's prophet; he replied, addressing Muḥammad, "I swear by Lāt and 'Uzzā that I consider you my greatest enemy and were I not under an oath to my tribe, I would certainly kill you." The prophet said "Accept the true faith." The Arab cast the lizard from his sleeve and said "I will never accept the faith till this lizard does." Then the prophet spoke to the lizard saying, "Oh thou lizard." The lizard answered him in choice Arabic saying "I am thy servant, Oh thou ornament of the Muslims." The prophet asked "Whom dost thou worship?" He replied "That God who is in Heaven and Earth, whose kingdom is in the earth and his wonders in the sea, and his marvels in the deserts. Him I worship who knows what is in the womb, and has established his punishment in the fire." The prophet asked "Who am I?" the lizard replied, "Thou art the prophet of the upholder of the world, and the seal of prophecy. He is rightly guided who believes in thee, and he is lost who denies thee." The Arab said—"I require no more cogent proof than this; when I approached thee, I had no greater enmity to any one than to thyself, but now I hold thee dearer than my life, my father and my mother." (Haiātu-l-Qulūb by Aghā Muḥammad Bāqir Majlisī.)

⁴ شق القمر See Qur'ān, Sūrah 54. "The hour draws nigh, and the moon is split asunder" (Sacred Books of the East Vol. IX). In the Ḥiyat al-Qulūb a MS. copy of which dated 25th Zāl Hijjah 1087 A. H. (1676 A. D.) is before me. I find the following account of the miracle performed by the prophet Muḥammad at Mekka. "The tribe of Qoreish sought as a sign from Muḥammad the performance of some miracle; the prophet pointed to the moon and by the power of God Most High it split into two halves. A trustworthy Hadīṣ by Ḥajrat Imām Ja'far Ṣādiq has come down to us, relating that fourteen infidels who were desirous of working

He lived like ants upon the earth in the midst of poverty,
For this reason the heaven appeared in his eyes as inferior in value to an eyelash.

In that place where the angels would have always cast their wings like ants,

If he had placed his foot even one hair's breadth beyond his abode.

¹In intercession from the lightness of his spirit he split a hair,
So that, for the sake of an ant, intercession was not heavy to him even by the weight of a hair.

If for the sake of an ant one fell into error, he would make his excuse.

He remained without bounty if he was not thankful in the least.

On that night when he caught the least glimpse of that illuminated dwelling

Wings² grew upon him like the ant in his desire for the infinite.

Having cast his eye upon the fat morsel of the world which perishes like a hair, he closed the avenues of his appetite against this turquoise-hued table,³ like the ant.

the prophet's destruction came to him on the evening of the 14th of Zul Hijjah and said to him, 'Every prophet has shewn some wonderful miracle, so this evening we desire you to shew us some great miracle.'
The prophet asked what miracle they desired him to shew them. They replied, 'If you have any power from God order the full moon to divide into two halves.' Thereupon the angel Gabriel came down from heaven and said to Muhammad, 'The Lord of heaven and earth sends greeting and has ordered all things to become obedient to you.' Then the Prophet raised his eyes to heaven and commanded the moon to divide into two halves, whereupon it split into two parts, and the prophet knelt to shew his gratitude to Almighty God. All authorities relate that this took place in Mekka; and further it is related that when certain travellers arrived they said in answer to questions 'We too saw on that night that the moon was in two halves.' Consequently the infidels believed that it was a true miracle and not merely magic." He also relates that these infidels imposed upon Muhammad the task of restoring the moon to its original condition, and also of turning one-half of the orb of the moon black while the other half was bright.

If thou hadst illumined the eye of the ant like the thread of hair, without the permission² of thy mercy this caravan would not have passed.

I have the foot of effort in the stirrup of devotion to you like the ant; as long as one single hair remains of me⁴ I will not desist from this endeavour.

How can my burden be in the least degree lightened apart from thy consent? How can I gird my loins like the ant through avarice,⁵ in the service of this one or that?

Although like the ant I have been crushed by the (iron) hand of desire

Yet I never contemplated the slightest idea of profit or loss apart from thee.

Since this is from thee I am happy, although my heart is distraught and pained; my heart is like the eye of the ant and my⁶ condition is like the hair of the heart-ravishing one.

And he also wrote in praise of Sultān Ruknu-d-Din Firoz 80.
imposing upon himself the necessity of introducing four things³
as follows :—

Every moment this old wolf lion-hearted infant-eating⁴ Does with me that which the elephant and rhinoceros do at the time of contest.

The elephant-like sky wears away my body as does the rhinoceros

The time like a lion takes away my patience like a wolf.

I have not the strength of the rhinoceros, and the sky is like a fierce elephant towards me.

It displays the boldness of a lion like the old wolf of the time.
The elephant did not so treat the rhinoceros, nor did the wolf
so treat the sheep

As the lion-like heaven treated this being who is thin as hair from oppression.

The Lion of the sky has the craft of the wolf and the strength of the rhinoceros.

For this cause he heaps pain continually on my heart like the load of an elephant.

¹ The Širāṭ or bridge across the fire of Hell. The Širāṭ or bridge crossing the infernal fire is described as finer than a hair and sharper than a sword and is beset with briars and sharp thorns. ¹ MS. (A) پیل مستست.

² پیل‌بند A stratagem in the game of chess. See Albirūnī (India) I. 183-184. The فیل or elephant it appears had the same mobility as the queen does in our modern game, that is it commanded both rank and diagonal.

There was one pawn known as the Piyāda-i-Aṣlī or original pawn, which had certain privileges attached to it. It was permitted once in the course of the game to remove to any square on the board where it might inflict the greatest injury on the adversary, as by attacking two pieces at once—"forking" them as chess players call it: under certain combinations this pawn was utilised to give mate. Thus in Auhadī's Life of Khawāja 'Alī Shatranjī we find

خواجہ دھقان علی شطرنجی کہ چون رخ بعرضه فکرت نهادی شاهان
 سخن را دواسپ و فیل طرح دادی منصوره باز خیال در فیل‌بند حیرت پیدای مات افتادی

"When he moved his Rūkh in the Board of imagination he gave the odds of two Knights and the Bishop to the kings of rhetoric: the strategist of imagination fell into the pawn's mate from the "Filband" of confusion."

This (فیل‌بند) was explained to me by a Muhammadan friend, a chess player, thus: suppose the white king at his own square, and a hostile pawn on his second square guarded by Black Bishop at Q. Kt. 4, the adversary brings his other Bishop to Q. R. 4 (ch) mate, white having other moves, but none which can prevent this final move of the Black Bishop.

The Bahr-i 'Ajam gives the following definition of پیل‌بند.

پیل‌بند نام یکی از منصوبه‌های شطرنج - و پیل‌بند دادن عبارت از مات کردن بکشت پیل *

Pilband is the name of a manoeuvre in chess. "To give pilband" means to mate by giving check with the Bishop (Pil).

چو در جنگ پیلان کشائی کند

دهی شاه قنوج را پیل‌بند

When in contest with elephants thou disengagest thy noose. Thou defeat-est the king of Qanauj with the "pilband" (Nizāmī).

The wolf of my patience casts off from him the waterproof like a lion, if the elephant of this coerulean castle has made me over to his charge like a rhinoceros.

The lion of the sky, like the elephant in colour, a wolf by a nature, takes and tears to pieces the armour of my patience like the hide of the rhinoceros.¹

Last night when the lion of the sky became elephant coloured in the hide of the rhinoceros, countless Josephs² appeared from the wolves of the heaven.

My life is in the hands of the lion, and under the foot of the rhinoceros of pain, until from the elephant bodied sky the 81. tail of the wolf³ became evident.

The claw of the lion and the horn of the rhinoceros, the tears of the elephant and the hair of the wolf.

Although these four are of use in making the amulet⁴ of heart's attachment.

Of what use are the special properties of the lion and rhinoceros and the wolf and the elephant, when that silvery cheeked one demands from me gold more than the weight of an elephant.

Since I do not possess the ferocity of the rhinoceros, the heart of the lion, and the breath of the wolf, I will go to meet my beloved with an elephant load of sorrow.

Hasan Dehlavi also says.

هیبات که پیلند عشقت
اسان اسان کشاد ننوان

Alas! that the "pillband" of thy love cannot easily be overcome.

In the jaws of the lion and under the foot of the rhinoceros, and of this old wolf, my beloved one keeps me as though depicted upon the tear of the elephant on account of love.

My beloved with the rhinoceros-hilted sword is trotting like a wolf, I, like the elephant, am following him with a body thin as thread.

Afterwards the wolf in rhinoceros-like armour, the elephant-like heaven, the lion-hunter of the sky appeared like the torch of the king.

The pillar of the world, the elephant-conquering king with the lion-headed mace, by whose wolf-swift horse the rhinoceros is fiercely attacked.

The eye of the wolf of the sky is of all colours from his lion-like mace, the hump of the rhinoceros of the earth is trodden into hollows by the foot of his elephant.

His elephantine club empties the forest of wolves, his wolf-swift horse¹ seizes the meadow from the lions.

His rhinoceros-like staff of office is in the heart of the wolf of the sky, his club² like a pillar has cleft asunder the lions.

When thou brandishest³ thy elephantine mace, the lion casts away its teeth, the wolf its claws, the rhinoceros its gall bladder, and the snake its head-stone.⁴

Rhinoceros-like in attack, wolf-like in gait, lion-like in bravery, elephant-like in body is thy steed, Oh hero! hundreds of thousands like Rustam are thy slaves.

The Makhzanu-l-Adwiyā says:—Hajaru-l-Haiyyah (حجر الحية) called in Persian مهر مار Muhra-i-Mār is of two kinds: one a mineral which is known as مار مهره Mār Muhra, some say that it is found in emerald mines. It has an emerald colour, inclined to black or ashy, shaped like a square signet stone; weight from one to two migqāls.

The other is an animal product which is found in the hinder part of the head of certain vipers. It is not found in all vipers, in fact it is only rarely found in any of them; when it is taken from the muscles it is soft but in contact with the air becomes stony hard. In size it is about the size of half a shell, (cowrie) oblong in shape, ashy-coloured. Certain stones are black and hard, striped with three white stripes, others are white and soft. Some are artificial. In order to distinguish the good and true from the false, place it upon the bite of a snake, it will stick to it if genuine. If milk is poured on it, the milk becomes clotted and changed in appearance; and it is said that when some of them are placed in milk the milk does not become coagulated: and when all the poison has been extracted by the stone it falls off, refusing Jundi (Junaidi) Chief Wazir.¹ Antagonism and strife shewed itself among the Amīrs, and Sulṭān Razẓiyah formed an excellent plan, and threw these disloyal Amīrs into confusion so that they fled in all directions, and she having selected certain of them for punishment put them to death,² and Nizāmu-l-Mulk retired to Sir Mūr³ and took up his abode in the secret place of death, and Khwāja Muhazzab the Deputy succeeded him in office. The kingdom of Razẓiyah gained considerable power, she despatched an army to relieve Rantanbhūr,⁴ which, after the death of Sulṭān Shamsu-d-Dīn, the Hindūs had invested continuously, and liberated the Muslims from their captivity, and Jamālu-d-Dīn Yāqūt, the Abyssinian, who was Master of the Horse, became her confidant and trusted adviser, to such a point that Sulṭān Razẓiyah whenever she rode horse or elephant used to rest upon his arm or shoulder.⁵ He became an object of envy to the Amīrs, and the Sulṭān Razẓiyah came out from the curtain of chastity⁶ and wearing the garments of men, regardless of propriety, used to wear a tunic and *kullāh*⁷ when seated on the throne to rule the kingdom. And in the year 637 H. (1239 A.D.) Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Iyāz, Governor of Lahore, displayed hostility. Sulṭān Razẓiyah proceeded against him and having reduced him to obedience added Multān also to his jāegir,⁸ and in the same year she brought up an army against

At this time Malik Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn Altūniyah⁵ the ruler of Tabarhindah having espoused the Sultān Razziyah, and having gained over certain of the Amīrs and a body of the Jats⁶ and Khūkharas, and all the landholders, brought an army towards Delhi. Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Bahrām Shāh, sent the Malik⁷ Balban the younger (who eventually became Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn) with a vast army to oppose Razziyah, and a battle ensued in which the forces of Razziyah were defeated. She then went to Tabarhindah, and a second time collected her forces and rallied her scattered troops, and arrived in the neighbourhood of the village of Katihal⁸ with the intention of conquering Delhi, and again being defeated at the hands of the Malik Balban the younger, took to flight and both she and Altūniyah fell into the hands of the Kawārs¹ and were put to death by order of Sultān Bahrām Shāh.

This event took place in the year 637 H. (1239 A.D.),² and the duration of the reign of Razziyah was three years six months and six days.

Some of them he put to death, and

¹ The printed text and MS. (A) and MS. (B) all have كواران Kawārān. There is some little uncertainty as to the identity of this tribe. The Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣiri says "Sultān Razziyah with Malik Altūniyah fell captive into the hands of Hindūs" (See Raverty's translation page 648 and note 3.)

It seems probable that the Kawārān here spoken of were a tribe of Jāts otherwise known by the name of Gaṭwārās. They are mentioned by Elliott, as holding villages in Gohana, in Sonīpat Bangar and in the Doāb on the opposite side of the Jumnā (see Elliott, *Races of the N. W. SULTĀN ALĀU-D-DĪN MAS'UD SHĀH IBN RUKNU-D-DĪN FĪROZSHĀH

Having been released from prison by the consent of his uncles Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd and Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn, the sons of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Iyaltimish, became king at the end of the year already mentioned (639 H.), after that 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban³ (the elder) had occupied the throne for one day and had issued a proclamation. None of the Maliks or Amīrs had been satisfied with this arrangement and reverted to Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and appointed Malik Qutbu-d-Dīn Ḥasan as Deputy, and Malik Muḥazzabu-d-Dīn Nizāmu-l-Mulk Wazīr of the kingdom, and in the year 640 H. the Amīrs of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn Mas'ud put to death Nizāmu-l-Mulk the Wazīr.

permanently upon Malik 'Izzu-d-Din Balban, the elder, Budāon was conferred upon Malik Tāju-d-Din; and in this year 'Izz-ud-Din Tughā Khān who had advanced from Karrah¹ to the neighbourhood of Lakhnauti sent Sharfu-l-Mulk Asha'ri to the Sultān 'Alāu-d-Din with a written despatch, the Sultān then sent a red canopy and a special robe of honour in charge of the Governor of Oudh² for 'Izzu-d-Din Tughā Khān who was in Lakhnauti, and having brought both his uncles aforementioned out of confinement, assigned the district of Qanauj to Malik Jalālu-d-Din, and Bahraj to Malik Nāṣiru-d-Din Maḥmūd, who acquitted themselves in those districts to his satisfaction. And in the year 642 H, the Mughūl forces³ arrived in the district of Lakhnauti, the assumption is that the Mughūls must have come by way of Tibet and Khitā, and Sultān 'Alāu-d-Din sent Timūr Khān Qarā Beg⁴ to the assistance of Tughā Khān and the Mughūls were defeated. Hostility arose between Tughā Khān and Malik Qirān,⁴ Tughā Khān came to Dehli, and Lakhnauti remained in the hands of Timūr Khān.⁴

¹ The printed text has كرو ! but MS. (A) has کرو which is correct. Karrah is on the right bank of the Gauges Lat. 25° 41' N. Long. 81° 24' E. (see Hunter, Imp. Gaz.) Vol. VIII. Before Akbar's time Karrah was the seat of government.

² Qāzī Jalālu-d-Din Kāsānī (Tabaqāt-i-Nāṣiri).

³ This is an error which has according to Raverty been handed on from author to author. The way the mistake originated is pointed out by him in his note 8 on p. 665.

The original reading was کفار جاجنگر Kuffār-i Jājnagar which by some strange perversion became کفار حبکر خان thence to کفار چنگز خان and so to our author's statement.

Jājnagar or Jājpūr on the Baitarāni river in Orissa, capital of the province under the Lion Dynasty, the Gajpati or Lords of Elephants (Āin-i-Akbarī II. 219 n. 1.) (see Imp. Gaz. Vol. VII., and Stat. Acc. of Bengal, XVIII. 85-89).

The کفار جاجنگر Infidel hordes of Jājnagar were of course Hindūs and not Mughūls, hence the assumption in the text to account for their presence before Lakhnauti is as unnecessary as it is absurd.

⁴ The real name of Timūr Khān Qarā Beg as he is called in the text, is Malik Qamaru-d-Din Qirān-i-Timūr Khān and he is the Malik Qirān referred to a line or two later. In other words Malik Qirān and "Timūr Khān" are one and the same person. In the text قيران is a misprint for قيران MS. (A). See also Raverty 663, n. 9.

In this year the Mughūl army¹ arrived in the vicinity of Uchh and assaulted it, and the Sultān proceeding by forced marches with all possible speed, reached the banks of the river Biāh; and the Mughūls raising the siege of Uchh took to flight; the Sultān on reaching Delhī took to arresting and putting to death to such an extent that the Amīrs and nobles turned against him, and agreed to summon Malik Nāsīru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd ibn Shamsu-d-Dīn from Bahrāij, and upon his arrival at Delhī in the year 644 H, they threw Sultān ‘Alāu-d-Dīn Mas‘ūd into prison and he speedily² exchanged that confinement for the prison house of eternity.

SULTĀN NĀSĪRU-D-DĪN MAḤMŪD IBN SHAMSU-D-DĪN IYALTIMISH

Succeeded to the sovereignty in the year 644 H, (1246 A.D.) and the Wazirship was conferred upon Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Balban the younger, who was in reality great, and was the slave and son-in-law of the father of Nāsīru-d-dīn.³

At the time of his accession great largesse was given, and the poets recited many congratulatory odes from some of which the following verses are taken—

² On the 23rd of Muharram 644 H. (1246 A.D.).

His reign extended to a period of four years, one month and one day (Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī).

³ Shamsu-d-Dīn Iyaltimish.

Nāsīru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd son of Shamsu-d-Dīn Iyaltimish was born at the Qaṣr Bāgh in Delhi in the year 626 H. (Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī).

It will be remembered that he was the second son of Iyaltimish to bear the name of Nāsīru-d-Dīn, which was given him upon the death of his elder brother (see p. 94) in 626 A. H. (see Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī, Cal. Text p. 201, l. 18.)

He was a man of quiet and retiring disposition and spent most of his leisure in making manuscript copies of the Qur’ān. Thomas (Pathān Kings) thinks that this faculty “possibly had its influence on the execution and finish of the legends of his coinage, which display a remarkable advance on the earlier mintages in the fineness of the lines and the improved definition of the Persian characters” (p. 125).

How can we measure the glory the Sikka acquires from his auspicious titles.¹

Or how compute the exultation of the Khūbah at the mention of his happy name.

The records of his equity and his laudable qualities are evident from the book called *Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāsirī*² which was composed in his honour.

The Sultān entrusted all the affairs of the kingdom to Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Balban and in giving him the title of Ulugh Khān said, "I deliver into thy hands the reins of absolute authority, beware lest thou commit thyself to any evil action,³ for tomorrow thou wilt be at a loss in the presence of Almighty God and thou wilt bring shame upon me and upon thyself." The Sultān himself would generally retire into his chamber and occupy himself in devotion, and reading the Qur'ān and in repeating the sacred names of God may He be glorified and exalted; and it is currently reported that on the occasion of a public audience he used to clothe himself from head to foot in regal apparel, while in private he used to wear an old ragged garment; and they also say that he used to devote his time to the copy of the Qur'ān which he was writing,⁴ 90.

As Sultānu-l-A'zamu-l-Munazzam, Nāsiru-d-Dunyā wau-d-Dīn, Abū-l-Muzaḥfar-i-Maḥmūd Shāh ibn-i Sultān Iyaltimish Yamīn-i-Khalīfatu-l-Ilah Nāsir-i-Amīri-l-Mūminīn.

The Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāsirī of Minhāju-s-Sirāj was written in his court and dedicated to him: hence its name.

² Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāsirī of Minhāju-s-Sirāj is a general history up to 658 H. composed by Abū-Umar Minhāju-d-Dīn Uḡmāu ibn Sirāju-d-Dīn al Juzʿānī. See Elliott II, 269. An English translation by Major Raverty has been published in the Bibliotheca Indica, by the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

further that he used to write it himself in private so that no one might recognize his handwriting and buy it for more than its fair value, and he used to sell (these) in the Bāzār. They relate also several other strange stories about him, which resemble the narratives regarding the rightly directed Khalifs - among them I have seen it written in a book that one day his wife was complaining of not having a servant, and she said "Whenever I bake bread for you my hands get burned and blistered." He wept and replied, "The world is passing away, bear your toil for these few days for God Almighty on the morrow of resurrection (we trust in Him and believe in Him) as a reward for this labour, will surely give you a Hūrī to wait upon you, as it is, I cannot possibly buy a slave girl for you from the public funds. His wife too, agreed to this.

And the Sultān in the month of Rajab in the year of his accession, took an army towards Multān¹ and in Zūl Qa'dah having crossed the river of Lahore (Rāvi) and having appointed Ulugh Khān as leader of the forces,² sent him towards the Jūd hills³ and the country round Nandanah, and he himself halted on the banks of the river Indus. Tieffenthaler, Vol. I, p. 211, Mēvāt est un canton assez étendu, borné par les provinces de Dehli et d'Adjmere et par les Districts de Djepour et de Dik. It extends "north and south from Badshāpur to Harsana, 47 miles, and east and west from Dik to Narnol, 57 miles." Alwar is about the centre of it now.

Tieffenthaler goes on to say "Cette contrée est habitée par beaucoup de Mahométans qui étaient ci-devant gentils. Elle appartenait auparavant aux Afghans dans le tems qu'ils regnoient a Dehli. Le Gouvernement passa ensuite aux Mogols. Maintenant le Djat (Jats) s'en est approprié la plus grande partie et une partie est tombée au pouvoir du Rājā de Djepour (Jaipūr) qui en a expulsé beaucoup d'habitans mahométans.

He speaks of the abundance of Nīm (Melia azadirachta) and Sissoo (Dalbergia sissoo) trees, and praises the cattle and horses of the country.

country with five thousand cavalry and 200,000 infantry came out to meet him and gave battle to the Sultān in great force, but was defeated and the fort of Narwar¹ was taken. And in this year Sher Khān Governor of Multān, and Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban who had left Nāgōr with reinforcements for him reduced the fortress of Uchh, and Sher Khān remained in the fortress, while Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban came to pay his respects to the king, and received from him as a jāegir the districts of Budāon and was given¹ the title of Kashlū Khān.

And in the year 650 H. (1252 A.D.) he left Dehli intending to proceed to Lahore, and from there he went to Multān and Uchh, and in this expedition Kashlū Khān accompanied the Sultān as far as the river Biāh.

And in the year 651 H. marching from Dehli, he detailed forces to act against Tabarhindah and Uchh and Multān of which Sher Khān had lost control, and of which the Sindhis held possession; and having regained possession of them, handed them over to the charge of Arsalān Khān and returned. And in the year 652 H. having assembled an army on the confines of the country at the foot of the hills² of Bijnor, and having crossed the Ganges by Narwar. Tieff. I. 175 gives a sketch plan of the fortress of Narwar and a long description from which the following note is abridged.

A town of moderate size about $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile long and ten in breadth, protected in his time (about 1780 A.D.) with stone walls, but formerly unprotected. Latitude 28° 30' N. Longitude taken from the Islands of the Blest 93° 24'. (Of. Āin-i-Akbari [Jarrett] III. 60.) Houses well and substantially built with flat roofs.

It has four gates, and there was a Christian family of Armenian stock who had built a palace, and a chapel where a Jesuit father said mass. The fortress was built upon a mountain having two peaks or spurs running parallel North and South.

He considers it must have been impregnable in old times before the invention of gunpowder "pour le malheur du genre humain et la ruine des villes."

A good supply of water is furnished by a large tank paved and flanked with stone. He also speaks of a magnetic iron ore from which they procure iron by smelting for export in various forms, and a flint of a whitish colour and marvellous hardness used for flint locks.

And after some time news arrived that certain of the Amirs, namely Ulugh Khān-i-A'zam, and Arsalān Khān and others, in concert with Malik Jalālu-d-Dīn, the brother of the Sultān, had commenced hostilities in the vicinity of Tabarhindah. The Sultān thereupon marched from Dehli, and in the neighbourhood of Tabarhindah and Kuhrām and Kaithal,⁵ by the intervention of a party of Amirs, the Amirs agreed to peace, and with many protestations and oaths suing for pardon came into submission to the Sultān; and the Sultān conferred upon Malik Jalālu-d-Dīn the Governorship of Lahore, and proceeded to the capital. And in the year 653 H. the feelings of the Sultān underwent a change with respect to his mother Malika-i-Jahān. He gave Qutluḡ Khān, to whom Malika-i-Jahān was married, a jāegīr in Oudh,⁶ and a short time after turning against him also⁷ sent him to Bahraij. He took fright at this and came to the hill country of Sir Mūr, and Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Kashlū Khān and certain other Amirs made common cause with him and laid the foundation of revolt; the Sultān

Ulugh Khān represented this at the Sultān's court, and the Sultān issued an order for every individual of that party to go separately to his own place, and Qutlugh Khān and Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Kashlū Khān after this defeat, traversed the distance of a hundred *krohs*³ in two days and came from Sāmāna to Dehli, but did not find the party

Qutlugh Khān and Kashlū Khān also were separated, and Ulugh Khān following them arrived in the Sultān's presence.⁴ And in the year 655 H. the Sultān issued an order for the expulsion of certain nobles and grandees from the city of Dehli, and at the end of this year the Mughūls arrived on the boundaries of Uchh and Multān; Kashlū Khān Balban made common cause with them and the Sultān came up in hot haste against them. The Mughūls were not able to stand against him and turned back towards Khurāsān. The Sultān also raised the banner of return towards the capital and having bestowed a robe of honour upon Malik Jalālu-d-Dīn Jānī marched towards Lakhnauti.⁵ And in the year 656 H. ⁴ These Maliks (Qutlugh Khān and 'Izzu-d-Dīn Kashlū Khān) retired towards the Siwālik territory foiled in their object (Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣiri).

And in the year 657 H. elephants and great treasure and jewels and cloths without number, arrived from Lakhnauti as presents, and in Rajab of this year Malik 'Izzu-d-Din Kashlū Khān Balban earning relief from the turmoil of this transitory world, hastened to the next world, and in this year Ghauṣu-l-'Ālam Ḥaẓrat Shaikh Bahāu-d-Din Zakariyā² the Multāni, may God sanctify him, raised the tent of³ close union with God Almighty, and a celebrated poet wrote this couplet to record the date:

Multān in the reign of Shihābu-d-Din Ghūrī. He was one of the numerous disciples of Bahāu-d-Din Zakariyā, and died two years later than his master, according to Firishta (see also Āin-i-Akbarī [Jarrett] III. p. 363).

His tomb is mentioned in the Āin-i-Akbarī (I. 325) as being at Ajūdhan (Pāk Patan or Patan-i-Panjāb).

There is, as will be seen, considerable discrepancy in the dates, Badāonī gives 656 H. as the date of Farīdu-d-Din Ganj-i-shakar's death and 657 H. as that of the death of Bahāu-d-Din Zakariyā, while according to Firishta the latter should be 666 H. and the former 668 H. The Āin-i-Akbarī gives 668 H. as the date of the death of Farīdu-d-Din Ganj-i-shakar and 665 H. as the date of the death of Bahāu-d-Din Zakariyā.

² Shaikh Bahāu-d-Din Zakariyā was a famous Muḥammadan saint of Multān. He was the grandson of Kamāl-u-d-Din 'Alī Shāh Qureishī who left Mecca for Khwārazm and thence came to Multān, the Qubbatu-l-Islām, and resided there, and became acknowledged by the people as their teacher and guide. Shaikh Bahāu-d-Din was the son of Shaikh Wajihu-d-Din by the daughter of Husām-d-Din Tarmaḍī and was born in the fort of Kot Karor in 587 H. He died at Delhi about the year 666 H.; while engaged in devotion in his chamber an angel bearing a sealed missive having appeared to his son Ṣadr-u-d-Din 'Ārif with a command to give the missive to Bahāu-d-Din. He did so and retired, but returned on hearing voices in the room saying دوست بدوست رسيد. "The friend has joined the friend" when he found his father lying dead.

This account is abridged from Firishta. The account of the saint given by Beale differs from this but the source of the information given there is not stated. See also Āin-i-Akbarī (Jarrett) III. 362 and note.

The tomb of Bahāu-d-Din Zakariyā is in Multān.

His tomb is well known in Dehli, and every year crowds flock to visit it.

Verse.

Come and cast one thoughtful look upon this dust.
For it is the dust of the resting-place of trusted kings.

And of the number of those who sounded the drum of poetry and attained the rank of Maliku-l-Kalām (Lord of Eloquence) during Nāsiru-d-Dīn's reign, one was Shamsu-d-Dīn Dabir,³ whose manifest excellencies and perfection are beyond description and need no narration and praise, and Mīr Khusrū,⁴ may God sanctify him, who tested the genuineness of his own poems by the touchstone of their acceptability to that other (Shamsu-d-Dīn) used to boast of them, and in the preface to the Ghurraṭu-l-Kamāl and at the end of the Hasht Bihisht greatly embellished his words in the mention of the praiseworthy qualities and in spreading

Khān-i-Mu'azzam Ulugh Khān-i-A'zam marched towards the hills of Dehli to quell the insurrection of the robbers of Miwāt who would be a terror to devils.

For a full account of the province of Miwāt see Hunter, Imp. Gaz., Vol. IX. It includes the British districts of Muttra and Gurgāon, part of Ulwar and Bhartpur. See also page 129, note 2, of this Volume.

² On the 11th Jamādu-l-Awwal; as he came to the throne on the 23rd Muharram 644 H. his reign was twenty years three months and some days, not as stated in the text. He left no issue, his only son by the daughter of Ulugh Khān having died in infancy.

³ There is no mention of this poet in either the Majma'u-l-Fuḡahū or the Ātashkādā. There are some highly laudatory verses at the end of the Hasht Bihisht in praise of one Abū Hanifah, possibly referring to Shamsu-d-Dīn.

abroad the excellencies of (that friend of his). And Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Balban having at the end of his reign appointed him Secretary for the countries of Bangāla and Kāmruḍ had left him in the service of his elder son Nāṣiru-d-Dīn¹ Bughrā Khān, and these few couplets are from an ode of his.

Oh thou² of whom this work of my heart is unworthy though my ignorance; thou gavest me last night a false promise of entertainment.

All night I kept my eyes awake and³ I did not know that that was longing of that kind which you know to be vain.

I keep my heart⁴ exercised thinking of thy face, and wondering why thy colour is so ripe and thy forehead like virgin silver.

The date assigned for his birth seems unlikely as he would only have been thirteen when Nāṣiru-d-Dīn died. The Majma'ul Fuṣahā gives no date for his birth but says his father came to Dehlī from Turkistān in the time of Changiz Khān's invasion, and obtained great distinction in the court of Sultān Mahmūd ibn Tughlaq Shāh and was killed in 'a rebellion of the infidels, when his son Amīr Khusrū was appointed as his successor in his Amirship, which he eventually gave up and acquired great skill and distinction as a poet. He died in 725 H. and was buried in the tomb of Shaikh Shakarganj (Farīdu-d-Dīn Ganjshakar see note 1, page 133).

He was the author the celebrated Qirānu-s-Sa'dain the poem which was written to commemorate the meeting of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn with his son Sultān Kai Qubād on the banks of the Ghāgra, and of several other works (see Elliott, III. pp. 523 and seqq.).

¹ MS. (A) reads correctly سلطان ناصر الدين Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Bughrā Khān second son of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Balban. He was placed in charge of Bengal after the revolt and defeat of its governor Tughral.

He married a daughter of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Mahmūd Shāh by whom he had a son and successor Kai-Qubād. (See Raverty, Tabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī 716 n.).

In Thomas, Pathan Kings of Dehlī there is given a copy of an inscription of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Mahmūd which was engraved over the doorway of the minaret at Aligarh bearing the date 10th Rajab A.H. 652, and the author mentions in rather too mild terms the wanton Vandalism which allowed a record of this kind to be destroyed in 1861.

Thomas advances the opinion that the original design for this inscription both in matter and form was the work of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn himself. (cf. Thomas op. cit. 129-130).

'He who pares his nails and trims his beard every Friday saying, "In the name of God and in accordance with the ordinance of the prophet of God," every paring shall be counted to him as the manumission of a slave of the sons of Isma'il.'

Special rules are laid down for cutting the nails. They must be cut on Friday, and Muḥammad said, He who cuts his nails in alternate order will never be afflicted with blear eyes. It is also said in a Ḥadīḡ by Ḥamīd ibn 'Abdu-r-Rahmān.

من قص اظفاره يوم الجمعة دخل فيه شفاء وخرج منه داء

"He who pares his nails on Friday is filled with health and sickness leaves him." The preferable time for paring the nails is Thursday after the evening prayer. In the case of the right hand one should commence from the little finger, proceeding to the middle finger and thence to the thumb, thence to the ring finger and lastly to the forefinger. The order in the left hand is (1) Thumb (2) middle finger (3) little finger (4) forefinger (5) ring-finger.

From the dread of the falcon of his equity it behoves that they should take to flight ¹ when the eagle with lancet-like talons casts his feathers and talons (through fear).

Inasmuch as the mention arose of 'Amīd, who was controller of all the states of Hindustān, it is essential to reproduce something from poems of his which are rarely met with :

Arise 'Amīd, if thy heart is not cold and dead

Leave thy love-poems, and speak the praise of the Lord of the world.

Praise the Court of Heaven, for he has raised on high many an azure dome without the irksome aid of tools ;

² روح Rūḥ is the vital principle the "breath of life" (Gen. ii. 7) as distinguished from the نفس nafs or conscious manifestation of life, or the consciousness itself. Thus we find in the Qur'ān XV. 29.

وَنَفَخْتُ فِيْهِ مِنْ رُّوْحِيْ wa nafaḥtu fihī min rūḥī, "and breathed into it of my spirit;" and again in Qur'ān V. 116.

اِنْ كُنْتَ قُلْتَ فَقَدْ عَلِمْتَ مَا فِيْ نَفْسِيْ

In kunto qultu faqad 'alimahu ta'lamu mā fī nafsī.

"Had I said so verily thou wouldst have known it, thou knowest what is in my soul"

It is said in a tradition that God created Adam and put into him a نفس nafs and a روح rūḥ.

It would seem as though the word نفس nafs connotes the same idea as the word mind, using this word in the sense of the phenomena produced by

By thy order three daughters have come forth from the soul ¹
Without the pangs of childbirth, and without the intermediary influence of a husband.

Compared with thy ancient order what is Kisrā ² and what is Qaiṣar

In face of thy decree what is the Khāqān and what is Halākū ?
Without thy command no ant can draw a single breath of its own will,

Without thy knowledge no sleeper turns from one side to the other.

the action of the روح rūḥ or vital principle upon matter: the highest form of matter, with which we are familiar, namely, the nerve structures of the human brain, admits of certain phenomena which in their totality we call mind: the existence of a higher form of matter capable of higher manifestation than those which come within our present experience is obviously possible. A force apart from matter may, for anything we know, exist in a way that we cannot figure to ourselves for want of some example. Such a force self-existent would be روح Rūḥ.

¹ These three daughters here referred to are the three divisions of نفس nafs. نفس nafs, is by Arabian metaphysicians divided primarily into two divisions (a) نفس لعقل nafsu-l-'aql which is also called النفس الناطقة annafsu-n-nāṭiqah the reason, mind, or discriminating faculty and (b) نفس الحياة nafsu-l-ḥaiyāt the breath of life.

The first of these is again sub-divided into two, that which commands and that which forbids: thus they say فلان يوتر نفسيه fulān yu'tamiru nafsihi. Such an one consults his two minds, i.e., weighs the pros and cons.

See Lane article نفس and روح, also Ghiyāṭu-l-lughāt, and Kashshāf art. نفس.

² كسرى Kisrā The Chosroes. قيسر Qaiṣar Caesar; an Emperor.

خاقان A Turkish word meaning Emperor. The name given to the Emperor of China and potentates of Chinese Tartary. (See de Courteille Turk. Orient. Dict. خاقان). Khāqān. Originally the title Qān was given to the supreme sovereign of the Moguls, while the subordinate princes of the Chaghatai and other Chingiz lines were styled only Khān.

After a time the higher Qān lost its peculiar distinctive dignity and was used by many besides the sovereign (see Tārīkh-i-Rashidi (Elias and Ross), p. 30 n. 1).

هلاكو Halākū, descendant of Changiz Khān.

Although I like a harp am hump backed and head downwards,¹
 Yet in the assembly of thy hope I play the air of Yā Huwa.²
 On that day when out of awe of thee all the assembly of the prophets own their allegiance on bended knees;
 Oh Lord do thou of thy clemency bestow upon me, wretched man that I am, forgiveness, for I am defiled with disobedience and engulfed in it on all sides.

His also is the following in praise of the prophet may the peace and blessing of God be upon him ³

¹ The word چنگ chang in its original sense means bent or curved; hence it means a hook; and especially the hook called also, "gajak" گاجک with which elephants are driven. Another secondary meaning is the bent hand and fingers of man, or the claws of animals and talons of birds. Also the name of a musical instrument (Burhān-i-Qāfi). The چنگ was played with a plectrum called زخمه Zakhma, and from its description as گوز Kūz and سرنگون sarngūn was like the عود ūd of the Arabs, and very similar to the mandolin of our times.

² یا هو. Yā huwa. An invocation to the most High—equivalent to "My God and my Lord."

⁶ Sumbul (Nardostachys jatamansi N. O. Valerianaceae) radpos, or spikenard of the ancients, a perfume held in high esteem. (S. John xii. 2).

In the Bahru-l-Jawāhir it is stated that there are two kinds of Sumbul—Sumbul-i-Hindī, and Sumbul-i-Rūmī.

It is laxative and a tonic to the brain.....useful in dropsy, in flatulence and as a hæmostatic in metrorrhagia.

The perfumed sumbul is the variety called Sumbul-i-Hindī while the Sumbul-i-Rūmī is also called Nardīn.

² The phrase تَوْرُفٌ مَسْدَسٌ means literally the six-sided oven-shaped (world).
The six sides or divisions of the world are—عالم الأنس 'alamu-l-ins, the world of mankind.

عالم الجن 'alamu-l-jinn, the world of the jinn or genii.
عالم الملائكة 'alamu-l-malâikah, the world of angels.
عالم الحيوان 'alamu-l-haywân, the animal world.
عالم النبات 'alamu-n-nabât, the vegetable world.
عالم المعدن 'alamu-l-ma'âdîn, the mineral world.

The five stated times of prayer are known as—فجر fajr and عشاء 'ashâ and مغرب maghrib عصر 'asr ظهر zuhr.

The two standards علم 'alam are the sun and moon, cf. Qur'ân, XXXVI., 38, 39.

³ M. S. (A) reads جزعش. His onyx-like eye, &c.

This must be taken to refer to a saying of the prophet Muḥammad "The cornelian for me and the onyx for my enemies." According to the Nakbatu-d-dahr (p. 69), he said this "because the onyx causes its wearer to become ill-tempered, rash, precipitate, and litigious..... There are several varieties of onyx..... the best is that in which the markings are of equal breadth.....
The whiteness of the onyx increases as the moon waxes, and diminishes as it waness. The onyx softens when boiled in oil, sparkling and emitting light.....
The people of China (مدين) where the onyx is found, will not approach the mines on account of the unluckiness of the stone, so that only the poorest class will work there.

One property possessed by the onyx is that of curing scald-head in children:
it also acts as a sialagogue causing them to dribble when it is hung round their necks."

See also Lane Art. جزع where it is stated that the wearing of an onyx in a signet induces anxiety, disquietude of mind, grief and terrifying dreams

It relieves dimness of vision and is a stomachic tonic, is a laxative and expectorant. Sadīdī further says that honey is beneficial to old men, but injurious to youths and people of hot temperament, is aphrodisiac when heated with pulp of roses, and cures the bites of snakes and of dogs. Neither book mentions its use in the treatment of tremors specifically, but Sadīdī's statement that it is good for old men may refer to senile tremors.

he ordered Abraham to be brought before him; then turning towards him he said, Oh Abraham, bid your God to come with his army, and array himself against me in battle so that the one who conquers may have the upper hand. Tomorrow, that is Wednesday, we will arrange the battle field before this city, and test man with man.

Then having reviewed his army he came out from the city with a countless array, and drew up in line on the battle field.

The prophet Abraham came out alone and unaccompanied, in face of that vast host, and stood there. Suddenly, by the command of the Almighty, the face of heaven became darkened by a cloud of mosquitos, which are the most contemptible of all creatures, and they at once began to sting the army of Nimrūd, and put them to flight, and most of those worthless ones died.
Nimrūd, on seeing this, in fear and shame turned his back upon the whirlpool of death, and fled into his fort. Suddenly a single mosquito entering after him stung his lip, and reached his brain. For forty years the mosquito fed upon his brain, after which Nimrūd died in abject misery.¹

As the mosquito is known to be the intermediary host of certain parasites and may be the means of conveying infective disease, there may be a substratum of truth in this fable.

The Shī'ahs say that 'Abu Bakr seized Faddak by force. The poet denies this assertion in the above verse.

¹ يوم شوم. The ill-omen attending the owl is common to all countries, probably from the habit it has of frequenting ruined buildings. The Arabic proverb indicates the estimation in which the owl was held.

لو كان في البومة خير ما تركها الهيباد

Si in ulula bonum fuisset, eam venator non reliquisset. Freytag Meid. Prov. II. p. 572.

The story told by Mas'ūdī about Bahrām points in the same direction. See Ibn Khaldūn (de Slane). Prolegomenes, I. 107.

In the Huḍuṭ-i-Haivān there is a story told of Al Mā'mūn who in the course of his peregrinations one day saw a young man writing something on the wall with a piece of charcoal. He ordered his servants to see what the man was writing and it was as follows :

يا قصر قد جمع فيك الشوم واللوم متي يعيش في اركانك البوم
يوم يعيش فيك البوم من فرحي اكون اول من نعيك مرفوم

Oh palace ill-luck and curse are assembled in thee ;

When will the owl make her nest in thy pillars ?

Happy the day when the owl builds her nest in thee !

I shall be the first to announce thy downfall.

He explained this before Al Mā'mūn by saying that he was in great distress and hoped to benefit by the ruin of the palace.

² The name Khārijī was given to any one who denied any one of the true Imāms (see Cureton's Shahrestānī Milal wa Nihal, page 85.)

See the article Khawārij in Hughes, Dict. of Islām.

The Khārijī heresy was that any man of no matter what nation or tribe may be appointed Khalīfah provided that he was a good man and was elected by the whole body of Moslems.

See for a fuller account of this sect. Sale's Qar'ān. Preliminary Discourse, p. 123 (Ed. of 1857) (Badger. Imāms and Seyyids of Omān, Appendix, pp. 374, and seq.) (Osborn, Islām under the Arabs, p. 116). The last mentioned gives a full account of the origin of this heretical sect when 'Alī and Mā'āwīa met at Siffin from which the following is an extract " The valour of 'Alī was brilliantly seconded by that of his favourite lieutenant Malika-l-Ashtar, the Marshal Ney of the Arabian Army. A tremendous charge by Malik at last forced a wing of the Syrian troops to give ground. Gradually the whole line was forced back, the retreat became a rout."

² If we read كرك for كرك the meaning will be "strikes it with the elephant goad." There is some uncertainty about the meaning of the word كرك. One meaning is according to the Burhān-i-Qāṭi "an earthenware vessel which is used for holding dates."

³ فنك قنق should be the reading. MS. (A) MS. (B) read فنك كرك.

¹ As regards the word كسوف kusūf it is generally held that this word is more specially applicable to an eclipse of the sun while خسوف khusūf is applied to denote an eclipse of the moon. The Ghiyāṭu-l-Lughāt applies it to either: while the Kashshāf Iṭṭilāḥāt-i-Funūn lays down that كسوف should be used to denote a total eclipse, and خسوف a partial eclipse; كسوف moreover indicating only a change of colour, while خسوف denotes a total loss of colour. Lane however says they both mean the same, or that "in the common conventional language الكسوف is the partial loss of the light of the sun, and الخسوف is the total loss of the light thereof," and it is said in a tradition.

ان الشمس والقمر لا يتخفان لموت احد او لحياته

As ك is a much earlier letter than خ it is probable that originally at all events كسوف stood for an eclipse either of the sun or moon, the meaning being subsequently modified for convenience.

² Compare the Hindū mythological monster Rāhu.

The name Rāhu by which the ascending node is designated is properly mythological and belongs to the monster in the heavens which, by the ancient Hindūs, as by more than one other people, was believed to occasion the eclipses of the sun and moon by attempting to devour them. Burgess, Sūrya Sidāhānta, p. 50.

Mythologically Rāhu is a Daitya who is supposed to seize the sun and moon and swallow them thus obscuring their rays and causing eclipses. Rāhu and Keta are in astronomy the ascending and descending nodes. Rāhu is the cause of eclipses and is used to designate the eclipse itself. (Dowson Dict. of Hindu Mythology, p. 252.)

1. "In former times (says Albirūnī) this day (Mihrajān) used to coincide with the beginning of winter" at which time the Jihūn would be frozen and unfit for navigation owing to the intense cold. Yāqūt states that in the winter the Jihūn freezes so hard that the ice is five spans (about 40 inches) thick; that the people dig wells through the ice with pick-axes to get water, and that caravans and carts cross the ice, which become like a high road covered with dust. This continues two months. Concerning the word Mihrgān, the Burhān-i-Qāṭi' says, "Mihrgān is the seventh month of the Shamsī year, which corresponds with the position of the sun in Libra, which is the beginning of autumn. The feast of Mihrgān is the next greatest feast among the Persians to that of Nauroz, and, like this latter feast, is divided into two, Mihrgān-i-khassa and Mihrgān-i-'amma; the feast of Mihrgān lasts for six days beginning from the sixteenth of the month. It is said that God Almighty laid out the world on the 21st and endowed bodies with souls on that day. They say also that Farīdūn ascended the throne on that day. The meaning of Mihrgān is the binding of affection (محبت پیوستن) and it was so called because for the above reasons the people were treated kindly by their rulers on that day.

Others again say that there was a king of the Persians named Mihr who was a great tyrant and was consigned to hell in the middle of this month, so that they called it Mihrgān in the meaning of death of a tyrannical king. (Burhān-i-Qāṭi').

According to others Mihr is the name of the sun, who is said to have for the first time appeared to the world on this day. This is indicated by the custom of the Kīrās of crowning themselves on this day with a crown on which was worked an image of the sun and of the wheel on which he rotates.—(Albirūnī).

¹ He compares the world to ebony because of its blackness indicating misfortune. Ebony ابنوس is said in the Burhān-t-Qāfi to be "a black wood which when placed upon the fire 'emits a pleasant smell like the عود ('ūd) or aloes, when rubbed down with water and used as a collyrium it relieves night blindness, given internally it dispels calculus of the bladder."

The Bahrū-l-Jawāhir says that ebony "is a black wood which sinks when thrown into water," hence the poet assumes a ship built of ebony would sink.

² Abul Hārīs Sinjar Ibn Malakshah ibn Alp Arslān was Sultān of Khurāsān, Ghazna and Māwarāu-n-Nahr. He was the sixth of the Seljūq Sultāns,

He was excessively liberal, and was supposed to be 'wealthier than any of the Persian kings. He was defeated and taken prisoner by the Ghuzz tribe in 548 A. H. (1153 A.D.) but eventually escaped and was at the time of his death in 555 A.H. on the point of recovering his throne. He was born according to Ibn Khalliqān in A. H. 479, in the environs of Sinjūr whence he received his name. One authority places his death in the year 552. He died at Merv. See Ibn Khalliqān (de Slane) I. 600.

⁴ Qairawān, Long. 10° E. Lat. 36 N. is situated in the North of Africa, in the province of Tunis. It is the ancient Cyrene, the modern Kairwān. At the commencement of the Musulman occupation it was the capital of Africa. See Abul Feda (Renaud) II. i. 198. The ocean of Qairawān is the Mediterranean.

In Abul Feda (Annales), we find that Qairawān was founded in the year 50 H. (665-666 A.D.) and was completed five years later.

The stag is harassed by envy of those muskladen locks.

From envy of the musk-coloured spot³ which stands like a drop of dew upon thy rose-like cheek, the stag without respite nurses a lacerated heart in his breast.

¹ The بحر قلزم Bahr-i-Qulzum. Clysmā. The Gulf of Herōpolis, or Western Gulf of the Red Sea, through which the Israelites passed on dry land. It is the modern Gulf of Suez, and it is probable that Suez occupies the site of the ancient town of Clysmā. Epiphanius mentions τὸ κλισμαρ τοῦ κλισματος as one of the three ports of the Red Sea, the others being Elath and Berenice.

There was in ancient times a fork or arm of the sea of which the "Bitter Lakes" are remains. The canal of Trajan beginning at Babylon entered the Red Sea at Clysmā.

Thou my life art when thou smilest
But my death when thou art angered.
Ah! thy cheek like summer roses
With the grains of musk be sprinkled!

Needs must that with those two love fascinated eyes,
The stag should endeavour to protect himself from the snares of thy locks.

When the story of thy fragrant tresses reached him,
The stag curtailed his narration of the bag of musk.
The stag suffered from the effects of the intoxication of thine

And he got rid of his headache by drinking of the cup of the assembly of the world-subduer.

The auspicious lion, protector of the crown of true religion,
Sinjar,

In whose estimation the fierce lion of the sky is but a stag.

The stag thought right to carry a fragrant ball of camphor ¹ taken from the dust of his threshold, to Khiṭā as a memorial.
Perhaps it was from the dust of his dignity which became ² the ornament of the sun, that the stag obtained superiority over the wild beasts by reason of his musk-bag.

Happy art thou star-arrowed one, whom the demon-hearted

An enemy who falls into thy clutches does not escape ;
Who has ever known the stag to escape from the claws of the footedness.

At the time of attack, how can the stag in spite of all his hoofs ?

Think it not strange if from the abundance of his bounty, the lynx goes slowly on foot, and the stag swiftly like a horse

This comparison of the mole on a cheek to grains of musk is one of the commonest similes among Persian poets.

Compared with the fragrance of thy goodness how can the stag boast¹ of the dried blood of his navel in Tātār.

By the aid of thy words which are like an antidote, I have no fear, even though the stag shall become like to one that feeds on snakes.²

His food is the snake; but afterwards like the elk, besides the antidote, the stag offers in every direction the bag of musk.

In the land in which thou art, by reason of thy great justice the lynx sits sorrowful, and the stag stands to comfort him.

The day that thou pursuest him he shews only his right shoulder when the stag rushes from the right to the left of thy army.

In reliance upon thee if a stag were to cherish a young lion in its bosom it would be no wonder.

What power have two hundred enemies against thy prowess?

What does the hunting leopard think of a head of a thousand stags?

Thy enemy will be able to engage in conflict with thee.

At that time when the stag's horns are capable of fighting the lion.

² The elk is said to feed on snakes and the water which collects at the corners of the eye (inner canthus) is reputed an antidote for all poisons. (Burhān-i-Qāfī).

The following is abridged from the Haiātū-l-Haiwān. "The stag is fond of snakes which it eats wherever it can find them, commencing from the tail of the snake. Sometimes the stag gets bitten by the snake in which case its tears flow down, and fill two hollows beneath its eyes large enough to contain the finger, here they congeal and become solid like wax. This wax is used as an antidote against the poison of snakes and scorpions, and when given by the mouth is useful as a remedy for other poisons. The stag also eats crabs, and hunts for fish by walking along the margin of the lake or river, when the fish come out of curiosity to see it, this fact is made use of by fishermen who are wont to dress in the skin of the stag.

The horns of the stag, which are shed yearly, are of great service to mankind, more especially as a remedy for impotence, and to facilitate parturition. If a portion is burned and administered mixed with honey it acts as a vermifuge, and when used as a dentifrice removes discoloration of the teeth. Used for fumigation it drives away reptiles and other venomous animals. If a portion is hung round the neck, the wearer will not sleep so long as it remains there. A draught of the stag's blood dissolves stone in the bladder."

119. In the meadow of thy favour the stag has never seen his quarters and sides as thin as his legs.
 Conqueror of the world, I have bound "The stag"¹ with thirty-three couplets in thy praise by way of experiment as though it were a camel.
 It is fitting that the word "musk deer" should be repeated as radif a hundred times since thou hast sent me in thy kindness a stag twice.
 Formerly the stag thought of nothing but the musk-bag, now he makes the glory of thy praise his constant occupation.
 'Amid has opened the musk-bag of wisdom in singing thy praises, like the musk-bag upon which the stag prides itself.²
 Always, as long as men search for musk on the surface of the ground, and no musk deer lays aside its power of producing musk,
 May the perfection of thy justice reach such a height that the stag may extract musk from the hunting leopard.
 Mayest thou roam at large and enjoy thyself in the meadow of fortune, just as the stag roams over the meadows in spring time.
 Fasting has made his form which was like the Nārwan³ slender as a reed, and has made his face which was red as the Arghawān⁴ pale like the saffron.

² mishk مشک is said to be the congealed blood of the navel of the stag of Khijā. (Burhān-i-Qāfi and Makhzanu-l-Akhya). The latter work says "It is very difficult to procure genuine musk, it is only brought as a great rarity as a present to kings and great rulers mixed with saffron and a little camphor as a remedy for headache; and is used alone or with other drugs such as the testicles of the beaver (Castoreum) as a stimulant snuff in paralysis and other cold diseases of the brain, for which it is also used by inunction. Smelling it removes the evil effects of poisons, especially of bish (aconite) and qurānu-s-sumbul. (P) It is also very useful as a collyrium in many diseases of the eye.

It is a cardiac tonic removing palpitation, and faintness, relieves dysentery and globulent distension. A suppository of musk assists parturition."

⁴ Another name for the Simurgh, and a synonym for anything rare and unattainable. (See Burhān-i-Qāfi under the name عنقاى مغرب)

There is a long account of the 'Anqā in the Hayāt-i-Hayrūn where it says on the authority of Qazwini that the 'Anqā is the largest of all birds which can seize an elephant as easily as a kite snatches up a rat. It once lived among men, but caused them so much annoyance that by the prayers of a holy prophet it was banished to an uninhabited island in mid ocean beyond the Equator, full of enormous animals. When the 'Anqā flies there is a sound like thunder and floods. It lives 2000 years, and pairs at the age of 500. It is said that the claws are made into large drinking cups. A description of the mode of capturing the 'Anqā is also given but is too long to quote.

Among the proverbs of the Arabs one is حلفت به عنقا مغرب which is said of any one of whose reformation there is no hope. "May the Anqā fly away with him."

They also say الچود والغول والعنقا ثلاثة إسماء أشيا لم توجد ولم تكن Libeality, the Ghūl, and the Anqā are three names of things unattainable and non-existent.

To dream of the 'Anqā is also said to ensure marrying a beautiful woman, or if already married, to ensure having a brave son.

At first Manizha was condemned to undergo the same punishment but her doom was changed and she was allowed to dwell near the pit, all the people being forbidden by proclamation to supply her with food. Eventually, by the help of Rustum, Bizhan was freed and he and Manizha went to Irân together. (See Atkinson's Shâh Nâmâh, pp. 300 and seqq.) See also page 116 note 5.

² اشرافية. The Illuminati. A sect of Philosophers, of whom Plato was one, who, instead of following the precepts of any revealed law, looked to their own proper inspiration and mental illumination, which they held to be the result of spiritual meditation. Hājī Khalīfah, III. p. 87, writes as follows:
 "Philosophia illuminationis (Hekmet el-ishrā'ī) sive Neo-Platonica inter veteres disciplinas philosophicas eundem locum tenet quem Theosophia inter doctrinas Islami simili modo, quo philosophia physica et theologica inter illas disciplinas locum tenet quem theologia dogmatico-scholastica inter has.

In the حاجي ملا فادي سبزواري by شرح منظومه we find: Philosophers are of four kinds,—those who arrive at wisdom simply by meditation, those who arrive at it simply by purification of the mind by seclusion and retirement, those who arrive at it by combining these two. These last are called the Ishrāqī sect.

At one time I have proclaimed Suhā² superior in brilliancy to the moon,

At another I have scorned the river as being inferior to the drippings of a sieve.³

I have made friends with Avarice, like 'Amid from the lust for blood, and for that reason I have made contentment my enemy.

¹ لادن Lādan. The resinous balsamic juice of Cistus creticus and other species; according to the Burhān-i-Qāfi it is called also عنب عسل Honey-ambergris and is used in medicine. It is the juice of a plant growing in sandy soil, of which goats are very fond, and their hair becomes covered with the exudation, the best is collected from their beards; si femina quedam, cui in utero fetus mortuus sit, vaginam suam vapore ladani vaporaverit, fetus ille mortuus illico excidit. See also Ibn Baiṭār (Sonthheimer) I. p. 409.

It is the מר of Genesis xxxvii. 25 and xliii. 11, where it is translated in our version myrrh. The Greeks called it στακρή. The true myrrh (Ar,

The اشهب Ashhab is the white ambergris which was accounted the best.

⁴ Qifrān, the exudation from species of mountain pines, black in colour, used according to the Burhān-i-Qāfi (and Qāmūs) for inunction of camels affected with mange. It is, according to these, the exudation of the tree called عرعر 'ar'ar, (Juniper) the properties of which are thus enumerated in the Makhsanu-l-Adwiya: 'Deobstruent, diuretic, emmenagogue, relieves cough and chest pains, and pain in the spleen; relieves flatulence, hæmorrhoids, flatulent colic or uterine pains. Sitting over a hot infusion of it causes uterine spasm, while a poultice of it is antisudorific. I can find no mention in either of these books of its use as an abortifacient. It is perhaps Juniperus Sabina (Savine) which is powerfully ecbolic. According to Ibn Baiṭār (Sonth.) II. p. 94, it is Pinus cedrus, but this appears to be incorrect. See also II. p. 189, عرعر 'Ar'ar.

The word استرون is derived in Burhān-i-Qāfi from استر and ون i.e. mule-like, because mules have no offspring.

The Wahhābī writers define Shirk as of four kinds:

(the White Palace) in the year 664 H.¹ He was one of the "Forty Slaves" of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn, each one of whom had attained to the dignity of Amīr. Inasmuch as the reins of government had been in his hands even in the days when he was merely Ulugh Khān, the affairs of the State very quickly came into his grasp. He would not allow people of low origin to have the slightest authority. It is said that a man named Fakhr, who had for years served as chief of the Bāzār, had recourse to one of the Sultān's more intimate attendants, and offered a very large sum² on the condition that if the Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Balban would speak with him once only, he would give him all this money and valuable property.³ When this request was represented to the Sultān he would not entertain it, and said 'to converse with people of low and mean extraction will lower my prestige.' He was altogether opposed to oppression, and, in the early days of his reign, punished certain of his Amīrs on account of some tyranny which they had practised upon their subjects, and having handed over one or two of them⁴ he permitted the complainants to exact retaliation, and after that these Amīrs had paid the blood money, for shame they could never come out of their houses as long as they lived, and at last they left the world.

He bought his release with a sum of 20,000 silver tankas but never left his house afterwards and died from shame. (See also Elliott, III. 101)

In this same year of his reign Tātār Khān the son of Arsalān Khān sent from Lakhnauti sixty-three elephants as a present; and in this year the Sultān proceeding to Patālī¹ and Kanpila, built the forts of Patālī, Kanpila, Bhojpūr, and certain other forts, and with five thousand cavalry crossed the Ganges on the pretext of making preparation for an expedition to the Jūd hills. In two days after leaving Dehli he arrived in the midst of the territory of Kāithar² and put to death every male, even those of eight years of age, and bound the women, and inflicted such chastisement that up till the reign of Jalāl-u-d-Dīn the territory of Badāon and Amroha remained safe from the ravages of the Kāitharis,³ and he threw open all the roads of Bihār and Jaunpūr, and all the roads of the Eastern part of India which were closed, and made over the territory of Miwāt, which lies in the Doāb, to strong handed governors, with orders to put to death the rebels, which they did, imprisoning some. Here he became ill, and the news of his illness³ reached the confines of Lakhnauti, and Tughral, Nāib of Amīn Khān, who had been appointed to succeed Sher Khān in that district, laid the foundation of rebellion, and fought with his master Amīn Khān and came off victorious, and having imprisoned him gathered round himself the paraphernalia of royalty, and gave himself the title of Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, and completely defeated some imperial troops which had been sent to oppose him. Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn brought up an army against Tughral but he went towards Jājnagar and Tārkila (Nārkila)⁴ and Malik Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn Beg Birlās⁵ was ordered to pursue him, the Rāi of Sunārgām named Dhanūj⁶ offering his services to the Sultān engaged to bring Tughral, and Malik Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn proceeding by forced marches found Tughral, who had fled into a jungle,⁷ walking about off his guard, and having put him to death sent his head to the court. Amīr Khusrū and Amīr Ḥasan of Dehli remained in his service for five years in Multān, and were enrolled among his intimate companions. On two occasions he sent large sums of gold from Multān to Shīrāz and begged that Shaiḫ Sa'dī,² may God have mercy on him, would come to live with him. The Shaiḫ did not come, excusing himself on the score of old age, but commended Mir Khusrū to the care of the Sultān, writing in excessively laudatory terms concerning him, and sent a collection of autograph poems. He is said to have lived to a great age, accounts differing between 102 and 112 years (Beale says 120). He spent 30 years in acquiring sciences, 30 years in travelling (he made the Hajj fourteen times) and 30 years in quietude: He died in the year 691 H. (1291 A.D.) He was the contemporary of many great men, among them Amīr Khusrū of Dehli who entertained him. His Kulliyāt are of world wide reputation. The Majma'ul Fuṣṣḥā (I. 274) from which the above is taken does not give the date of Sa'dī's birth, and gives the date of his death as 791 H. which is wrong. According to the account given by Beale Sa'dī was born "about the year 571 A.H." The above account would however place his birth in either 589 A.H. or 579 A.H. Of his works the Gulistān and Būstān are the best known.

He while in his assembly read 30,000 as 3,000 and, marching with a large force, by rapid and continuous marches arrived at the boundaries of Bāgh-i-Sabz,³ on the banks of the Lāhor river where he engaged the infidels and attained the dignity of martyrdom. This event took place in Zū-Hijjah of the year 683 H.,⁴ and Mir Ḥasan⁵ of Dehli composed a prose lament, and sent it to Dehli. It is copied here in its very words.

The Lament of Mir Hasan.

It is an old story that the tyrannous sphere, though it may for a time knit the knot of complaisance, and make a covenant of mutual sincerity, turns from its promise, and that discordant timō, although it professes to shew acquiescence, and makes specious promises of fidelity, fails to perform them.

gift back again without any treacherous conduct having been committed. The habits and customs of the oppressive times are cast in the same mould, whether by experience or by hearsay, we see or hear that whomsoever it perceives coming to perfection like the moon, it desires to darken the face of his fulness with the blot of defect, and whomsoever it finds rising like a cloud him it strives to tear to pieces, and to scatter his substance to the extreme boundaries of the horizon. As in this orchard of amazement and garden of regrets, no rose blooms without a thorn so no heart escapes the thorn of sorrow. Alas! for the newly sprung verdure which has become yellow, withered in the bloom of its beauty by the autumn of calamity. Alas! for the many fresh-springing trees which have been laid low in the dust of the ground by the fierce blast of Death. 132.

Consider the winds of Autumn, how chill they are and cold,
The cowardly blows they have dealt alike at the young and old.

One of the examples of this allegory is the death of the late Emperor Qā'an-i-Mulk Ghāzī,¹ may God make manifest his demonstrations and weigh down the scale with his excellencies, on Friday the last day of the month of Zū-l-Hijjah in the year 683 A.H., when the moon, like kindness in the heart of infidels, could nowhere be seen, the Sun with the company of the army of Islām came forth to smite with the sword, and the great Prince who was the Sun of the heaven of the kingdom, with the light of holy war shining on his noble brow, and the unchangeable determination of "jihād" firmly planted in his illustrious mind, placed his auspicious foot in the stirrup. By night they submitted to his judgment which solved all difficulties, that Itimar with the whole of his army had advanced into the plain at a distance of three farsangs. When morning broke, he commenced to march intending to leave that place, and at a distance of one farsang coming face to face with those accursed ones,² elected to draw up their forces in a place on the outskirts

Accordingly he very strongly fortified a large village which was close to the river, and made such dispositions that when the infidels came against it, both rivers² should be in the rear of his army, so that neither could any man of his own army turn in flight nor could any injury be inflicted upon his army by that troublesome horde³ and in very truth that choice of position was the acme of caution and the very height of skill in that world-conquering Khān, but since when Fate is adverse the thread of all plans becomes tangled, and the orderly row of enterprises becomes disordered,

He who falls in with evil fortune by the way,
His affairs fall out just as his enemies desire.
His Fortune like a mad man loses the right way,
His senses, like the nightblind, fall into the well.

By chance that day the Moon and the Sun, which may be compared to kings, were suspended in the sign of the Fish,⁴ and Mars, whose blood-red aspect is entirely due to the blood of the princes of the people, had drawn out from the quiver of that sign the arrow of disappointment and the dart of disobedience against that Orion⁵ (white) girdled Khān, who was like Leo coming forth from a watery sign; the house of fear and calamity and the proofs of sedition and signs of harm thus became evidently manifest, while the hint and indication of the proverb "In face of Fate wide becomes strait" became written on the consecutive pages (of his history). In short, at midday just as the courier of the heaven reached the country of noon, and the day of that world-conquering Emperor was approaching its decline, suddenly a band made its appearance from the direction of those infidels. The Khān-i-Ghāzī at that same moment mounted his horse and issued an order in obedience to which all the cavalry and the body-servants and retinue and retainers, in accordance with the mandate 'Kill the infidels all of them',¹ drew up in a line a hundred times stronger than the rampart of Sikandar.² After ordering the right wing and dressing the left wing, he himself of noble qualities, stood in the centre like the moon and the host of the stars, ready for the jihād, while the Tātār infidels, let confusion and dismay come upon them, crossed the river of Lāhor, and confronted the ranks of the Muslims. Thereupon these wild-loving desert-born savages, placing the feathers of the owl³ upon their illomened heads, while the Ghāzīs of Islām, kings of Turkestan and Khilj and notables of Hindustān, and all the soldiery made the battlefield a place of prayer—as the Holy Apostle, may the blessings and peace of God be upon him, declared that the holy war was closely allied to prayer, saying We return from the lesser holy war to the greater holy war,⁴ reciting the *takbīr*⁵ raised their hands in prayer, and in the first attack they put to the sword a considerable number of able-bodied men of the Mughūl cavalry, and the lances of the Malikis of the Court so wounded the limbs of their enemies that above each of them the blood spurted up like a spear, while sixty selected Turks interweaving their arrows like closely-woven cloth, made it appear as though the weft (of existence) of the Tātārs was being torn to shreds.¹

I have willingly put my neck in the noose for thy sake
Thou art my lassoer, who takest me with the noose of thy locks.

In short, that mighty king, the defender of the faith, the uprooter of infidelity, from mid-day till eventide attacked that impious crowd with the whole main body of his army, cheerfully and willingly, while the shouts of the victors in the fight, and the clamour of those eager for the fray⁴ deafened the ears of the world and of the sky,⁵ and tongues of fire which leapt from the heads of

Oh! dost thou wish to inflict the wound of orphanage on my heart.

In the very midst of this weary conflict, and amid all this pain and anguish, suddenly an arrow shot by Fate struck the wing of that falcon of the field of foray, and the bird of his life took its flight from the cage of the body of that noble one to the gardens of the Compassionate and meadows of *Rizwān*³

Verily we are God's and verily to Him do we return.⁴

At that same moment the backbone of the religion of Muḥammad, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him, broke like the heart of sorrowful orphans, and the rampart of the religion of Muḥammad fell in like the grave of poor people of low origin, and the assistance which the arm of the king alone could give slipped from our grasp, and the confidence which the army of the Muslims had possessed⁵ was lost. Exactly at the time of sunset, ⁴ The formula of resignation to the Divine will uttered by pious Muslims in all times of adversity, more especially bereavement or in presence of death. In the Qur'ān II. 150, 151 we read, "We will try you with something of fear and hunger and loss of wealth and souls and fruit; but give good tidings to the patient who when there falls on them a calamity say, 'Verily we are God's and verily, to Him do we return' these, on them are blessings from their Lord and mercy, and they it is who are guided." the sun of the life of that king whose sun was setting sank into the west of extinction, and the heaven, after the habit of mourners, dyed its raiment blue, while falling tears began to course down both its cheeks. Saturn, by way of fulfilling the requirements of fidelity and the demands of mourning, turned its robe to black and bewailed the people of Hindūstān because of his death: Jupiter, in pity for that dust besoiled body and blood-stained mantle rent his garments and cast his turban in the dust.

And Mars, may the hand of his power be tightly closed as the eye of the beauties, and the face of his sustenance be dark as the locks of Ethiopians, sore wounded by compassion for that calamity, with a rankling thorn¹ which brought forth his heart's blood, was trembling like the Fish² before the Sun, and like the Ram³ in the hands of the slaughterer, while the Sun, for shame that it had not striven to avert this calamity and prevent this disaster, came not forth, but sank below the earth, and Venus when she saw what violence the heavenly bodies were undergoing at the hands of Time, played her tambour more vehemently,⁴ changed the tune of the drum, and commenced music in a fresh measure, and because of the death of that slave-cherishing king, others in place of uttering musical strains began to weep, and Mercury⁵ who in forage and conquests in accord with the scribe, used to write many records of victory, in that tyranny⁶ was blackening his face with the contents of his inkhorn, and was clothing himself in a garment of paper made of the sheets of his own records, while the new moon in the shape of a crescent on the horizon, with bowed stature, in that day of judgment which had visited the earth, was striking its head on the wall and performing all the customary mourning duties.

My life ! is the solitude of thy dust pleasing to thee ? I do not wish it for thee.

May God, be He exalted and blessed, raise the purified and sanctified soul of that warrior prince to lofty heights and high dignities, and give him, from time to time, cups full of the brilliancy of his beauty and glory, and make all the kindness, and clemency, and affection, and care which he evinced towards this broken down worthless one, a means of increasing the dignity and wiping out the faults of that prince. Amen, Oh Lord of the worlds !

And Mir Khusrū¹ also on that day fell a prisoner into the hands of Lahori, a servant of the Mughlūl, and had to carry a nosebag and horsecloth upon his head. He recounts this circumstance in these words—

I who never even placed a rose upon my head,
He placed a load on my head and said "It is a rose."²

And he composed in poetry and sent to Dehli two elegies written in *tarkīb-band*³ which are found in the anthology known as میر خسرو¹ For an account of Mir Khusrū see index reference.

The poet, relates some of his experiences as a captive—"At the time that this learner of evil, the author, was a captive in the hands of the Mughlūs—may such days never return !—travelling in a sandy desert, where the heat made my head boil like a cauldron, I and the man who was with me on horseback arrived thirsty at a stream by the roadside. Although the naphtha of my life was heated I would not inflame it with oil by drinking a draught of water. Both my guard and his horse drank their fill and expired immediately." Elliott, III, Appendix, p. 545.

جل² means both horsecloth and also rose. There is a difference in the readings. MS. (A) reads, توبره بر سر نهاد و گفتا جل MS. (B) is like the text.

ترکیب بند³ In this class of composition a certain number of verses having the same metre and rhyme are followed by a couplet in the same metre but having a different rhyme—then the original rhyme is reverted to for a certain number of verses, and is again followed by a fresh couplet having the same metre, but a rhyme differing from both the original rhyme and that of the first interpolated couplet—and so on. In Tarjīb-band as Ghurratu-l-Kamāl.¹ For a space of a month more or less, folk used to sing those tarkīb-bands and used to chant them as threnodies over their dead from house to house.

The following is one of them :—

Is this the Resurrection day or is it a calamity from heaven 138.
which has come to light ?

Is this a disaster or has the day of Judgment appeared upon the earth ?

That breach which has appeared this year in Hindustān has given entrance to the flood of sedition below the foundation of the world.

The assembly of his friends has been scattered like the petals of the rose before the wind.

Autumn the leaf scatterer has, one would say, appeared in the garden,²

Every eyelash, in the absence of friends, has become a spear-point to the eye, and each point of the spear has brought blood spouting forth to a spear's length.

The heart writhes in agony since Time has broken the thread of companionship ;

When the string is broken, the pearls are scattered far and wide.

Such a flood of tears has been shed by the people on all sides that five fresh rivers have appeared around Multān.³

I wished to bring my heart's fire upon the tongue in the form of words,

When lo! a hundred tongues of fire appeared within my mouth.

has been stated elsewhere, the plan is similar to the above, but the interpolated couplet is always the same. This interpolation occurs not more than seven times both in Tarkīb-band and in Tarjī-band.

¹ Ghurratu-l-kamāl. The longest of the four Diwāns of Amīr Khusrū. It contains poems written from the 34th to the 42nd year of his life ; for an account of this and the other " Diwāns " see Elliott, III. Appendix. See also Hājī Khalifah, IV. 311.

² MS. (A) reads بوستان گلستان for بوستان.

³ MS. (A) agrees with the text. MS. (B) has a worthless reading

هیچ دیگر اندر مولتان آمد پدید

I dug deep in my breast, empty of all desire, and tears burst forth from both my eyes; when the earth is hollowed out then springs of water make their appearance.

Weeping has taken the bloom off my cheek, and disgraced me, because by reason of it, the skin has left my cheek and the bones have come in sight.

The planets are all conjoined in my eyes¹ perchance it portends a storm, since in a watery constellation a conjunction of planets is seen.

I only wish for that same collection (of friends) and how can this be!

It is essentially impossible—how can this Banātu-n-Na'sh become the Pleiades² (How can mourning become joy).

With what omen³ did the king lead his army from Multān and draw the infidel-slaying sword in order to slay the infidels.

¹ The text has در چشم we should read در چشم as in MS. (A).

The astrologers state that when a conjunction of all the planets shall take place in one of the watery constellations (Scorpio, Pisces, Aquarius) a deluge like that which destroyed the world in the time of Noah will occur again.

² This couplet differing as it does in rhyme, but being in the same metre is characteristic of ترکیب بند tarkīb band, see p. 196, note 2.

بنات النعش Banātu-u-na'sh, this name "The daughters of the bier" is given by the Arabs to the constellation Ursa Major. See Lane, s. v. نعش.

The origin of the name "The daughters of the bier" is said by Sedillot in his Notes to the Prolégomènes des Tables Astronomiques d'Ouloug Beg, to be that "the Arab Christians called the "Chariot" or the four stars composing the body of the Great Bear نعش لعازر Feretrum Lazari, and the three stars (the handle of the plough) of the tail Maria, Martha ac ancilla." The Persians have a superstition that if two people are together and one of them points out this constellation to the other, one of the two will die within the year.

The allusion to the Pleiades is explained by the following verses of Ibnul-Amīd (see de Slane, Ibn Khall: III. 263).

"I have seized on one of the opportunities which life offers to form with my companions a part of the band of the Pleiades, and, if you do not aid us to maintain our rank in that choir by sending us some wine, we shall be sad like the daughters of the hearse."

The Pleiades is considered a fortunate asterism (cf.) Job xxxviii. 13, "The sweet influences of Pleiades."

³ MSS. (A) and (B) read تاجه طالع.

When they brought him tidings of the enemy, with that strength which he possessed, ruthlessly he displayed his wrath and unfurled his standards.

That army which was then present sought for no second army,

For this reason that Rustum must not be indebted to an armed host.¹

One assault took him from Multān to Lāhor, saying

In my reign can any one rebel against me?

Am I not such a lion, that my sword which is like fire and water

Has by its slaying turned every year of theirs to dust and ashes?

Such torrents of blood often have I set flowing over the earth,

That the vulture flies² over the surface of blood like a duck over the water.

In this year to such an extent do I stain the earth with their blood,

That the evening twilight reddens with the reflection of the earth.

He was bent upon this enterprise and did not know that the Destiny of heaven had drawn the line of fate across the writing of the page of intention.

His eyes were smitten by the stars; if I have the power I must heat a needle, and like a shooting star thrust it into the eye of the seven planets.

The first day of the month became Muḥarram³ for him, 140.
not for him only but for all people.

² MSS. (A) and (B) read بر سر خون پر کشید.

³ MS. (A) reads غریزه شد محرم.

The Martyr Prince was killed on the last day of Zūl Hijjah the morrow of which was the sacred month of Muḥarram.

The 'Āshūrā (the tenth) is a voluntary fast day observed on the tenth of the month of Muḥarram. We read in the Mishkāt (VII.) Ibn Abbās said I did not see his highness intend the fast of any day which he considered more noble than the 'Āshūrā and the fast of Ramazān." Again "the fast of Since at the end of Zül Hijjah he drove his dagger into the neck of his enemies.

That the day of 'Āshūra might arrive he entered the ranks of holy war like Husain; the dust of his steed served as collyrium for the eye of the brilliant moon.

What an hour was that when the infidel reached the van of the army!

One upon another his squadrons passed over the river and came upon them unawares.¹

Thou didst see the king's steed,² casting the cloud of dust to the sky.

The wind-footed courier charging the infidels worthless as dust.

He raised a turmoil among the stars by the shouts of his army.

He produced an earthquake in the world by the rushing of his cavalry,

From the roll of the drums, the neighing of the horses, and the shouts of their riders, he caused a quaking of the plain and desert and mountain.

His horses were reeking (with sweat), with shoes as hot as fire, so that the hoofs of each fiery-shod steed struck sparks.³

What awe was there! at one time drawing up for battle, What terror was there! at another time raising the battle cries.⁴

From the flash of the sword in his hand he scattered heat and oppressiveness around him.

the day 'Āshūrā I am hopeful will cover the faults of the coming year." (Matthews, Vol. I. p. 402).

"It is the only day of Muḥarram observed by the Sunni Muslims, being the day on which, it is said, God created Adam and Eve, heaven and hell, the tablet of decree, the pen, life and death." (Hughes, Dict. of Islām).

³ MSS. (A) (B.) read روز سم هر آتشین نعلی.

⁴ MS. (A) آن چه هیبت بود گاهی کارزار آراستین
و آن چه دهشت بود گاهی تیرو دار انگشتین

MS. (B) reads the same as (A) repeating هیبت in the second line.

While the very thought of his spear pricked the heart like so many thorns.

The brave-hearted were attacking, bent on consuming their enemies,

The faint-hearted were plotting intent upon flight.

[Whiles, the king the cherisher of brave men, in that field of battle,

Was doing deeds of bravery and urging on the warriors].¹

Striking manfully blow after blow upon the ribs of the unmanly cowards,

And sending forth flames of fire from his well tempered sword.

Raising aloft like Jamshid the standard, to restrain the demons,

Urging on his steed, like the sun, to capture kingdoms.

Bringing the sky into supplication from that affliction.

Making the sun perform the Tayammum ² with that dust.

[At that time when there was a distinction between brave and coward,

Many a one there was whose lips were dry and his cheeks pale].³

بگاه شاه مرد پرور اندران میدان کار
کار مردان کردن و مردان کار انگیزتن

² تیمم. tayammum. This word signifies "Intention" and is restricted to the Wuḡū or ablutional ceremony performed with sand instead of water, which is permissible under certain circumstances, as for instance when water cannot be procured without incurring undue risk or labour. Qur'ān V. 9. "If...ye cannot find water then take fine surface sand and wipe your faces, and your hands therewith." This like so many of Muḥammad's injunctions was excellent as a sanitary measure.

³ The text and MS. (B) are both wrong here, repeating the preceding band as though this poem were a tarjībānd. The following is the correct reading as given in MS. (A)

اندران وقت که فرق از مرد تا نامرد بود
ای بساکس را که لبها خشک و روها زرد بود

Consequently in the translation I have omitted the incorrectly repeated lines, and have given these in their place.

The day was cast into darkness when they hurled¹ one upon the other,

The sun became pale when dagger was interweaved with dagger.

The day was nearing its decline, seeing that the swords² were weaving a sky of rust over the sun of the army.

The rows of swords in both ranks resembled (the teeth of) a comb,

The combatants are entangled one with the other like hair with hair.³

Those infidel heads⁴ which were matted together like the locks of black hair.

Ruby-red drops of blood sprang like tears⁵ from the sword. So that the gold-woven standards were besprinkled with the jewels.

Each single head was cleft in twain when the swords blows met.

¹ MS. (B) reads تافتند which is the best reading.

² This is the reading of MS. (A) که از زنگار تیغ MS. (B) follows the text but with no intelligible meaning. The reading of MS. (A) is not quite satisfactory and it seems possible that we should read از جنگار تیغ i.e. The warriors' swords.

³ MS. (A) has the following —

شاه را مانند آن صفهای تیغ از هردوسو

MS. (B) has شانه را مانند while the text has this as an alternative reading for زانت شانه را مانند.

MS. (B) is the reading adopted for this line, reading however تافتند (text) and MS. (A) for تافتند MS. (B) in the second line.

⁴ MS. (A) کافرون هروسو.

⁵ Insert تیغ before MS. (A).

The cloven heads became as one again when head was thrust against head.

The slain were lying on all sides of that verdant plain¹

Like the figures which they weave on the green brocade.

Long had they been striving even from morning till evening, face to face, and hair to hair, and hand to hand.²

The king³ wished to spread the carpet of victory but to what avail

Since the heavens had woven that carpet in another pattern.

From the declining day till night in that day of declining fortune].

Oh Lord ! was that blood which flowed over the face of the plain 143.

Or was it a river urging its waves toward the lips of the thirsty.

Just as water drops to the earth when you sift it⁵ in a sieve

So the blood dript from the limbs of the weary warriors.

The mortally wounded lay in the death-agony writhing on the ground, while from his throat blood burst in billows, spouting in the air.

The arrows drove the bodies over the sea of blood like boats,

Plying their oars madly and urging their course onwards.⁶

¹ MS. (A) reads صحرای سبز کن اطراف آن کشتگان افتاده which is the reading adopted.

² MS. (A) reads. رو بروی و مو بپوی و بسو بسو بر یافتند

MS. (B) رو برو و مو بپسو و مو بسو بر یافتند

³ MS. (B) reads incorrectly خرامت شد

⁴ The text and MS. (B) are again wrong here giving in this place the couplet beginning اندرون میدان, see page 196 note 3, instead of the lines which should follow

یک زمان شمشیر اقبالش نیاسود از قتال
از زوال روز تا شب اندرون روز زوال

⁵ MS. (A) بیژی

⁶ These lines follow here in MS. (A) in the text they are five couplets later.

The river bore those (the infidel enemies) to hell and the stream bore these (the Muslims) to Paradise, although the blood of infidel and Muslim was flowing side by side. The chargers were plunging and the heads of the riders falling.

The feet of the horses speeding and the heads of the riders bowling along.

Every spurt of blood which spurted from the body struck by an arrow

Leapt without restraint like a man who leaps to avoid an arrow.¹

The arrow of every man who from stoutness of heart had an arm nerved for the fight, fitted accurately to the bow flew straight to the heart of the enemy's army.

And he who from faint-heartedness has lost command of his arms and legs, was running now to the water and now to the plain.

The king, the commander of the army, was urging on the charger of his fortune, and it galloped with him in drawing up his line, and planning the scheme of action.

And demons were hurling fire upon the earth, and the stars had fallen,

When nothing of day remained for that sun of fortune.³

See Hughes Dict. of Islām art. Husain.

² MS. (A) reads که در آتش به آب افتاده بود but the text is the correct reading.

It refers to the circumstances already related under which the Khān-i Shahīd, the Martyr prince met his death. Firishta relates that having defeated the enemy the "generals of Hindustān discarded all caution and pursued the fugitives while the Muḥammad, the Martyr Khān, who had not performed the mid-day prayer, went hastily with 500 of his army to the margin of a large tank which then was near, alighted and engaged in prayer when his party were suddenly attacked by one of the Mughūl Generals with 2,000 men who were in ambush" (Tārīkh-i-Firishta, I. 143. Bombay Edition.) The Prince after a gallant fight was killed by an arrow and most of his men killed. It was here Amīr Khusrū was taken prisoner but escaped.

Solomon's famous signet ring in which lay the secret of all his power was stolen from him by the jinn Astarjī who while Solomon was bathing, personated him and demanded the ring from his wife (Yaminah) to whom he had entrusted it. Obtaining it from her he sat on the throne and ruled the kingdom, Solomon having been cast out as an imposter. Solomon entered the service of some fishermen who used to give him two fish daily as his

In the meantime Asaf recognized that it was not Solomon who was ruling, and brought 40 holy men (راغب) before the throne each bearing an open copy of the Taurāt (Book of the Law) which they read aloud; Asfarjī the demon was not able to bear this, rushed up to the roof of the palace, cast the ring into the water and fled. Solomon happened to be fishing that day but being tired fell asleep on the bank of the river, a large snake came out of the water and taking the green bough of a tree in its mouth was fanning Solomon as he slept, when the fisherman's daughter passed by; she ran off to her father and begged him to marry her to Solomon. Eventually this was settled (though Solomon protested his inability to provide a dowry) and Solomon married the girl. The fish which had swallowed the ring fell into their net on the following day and was given to Solomon with two other fish, Solomon took them and sold two of them and gave the other to the fisherman's daughter to fry. She struck a knife into it and the ring fell out, the whole house becoming illuminated, she screamed and fainted, Solomon seized the ring and put it on, thus recovering his lost kingdom.

² The text and MS. (B) are again wrong: the proper lines here are نی فزع بود آن قیامت را معین دیده ام
گر قیامت را نشان اینست پس من دیده ام

³ MS. (A) reads (variant adopted) دایرات آسمان بن MS. (B) is the same as the text except that it reads پیرکار in both lines.

This is one of the tricks of fate which at one time sheds blood and at another gives life;¹ we are powerless, it is useless to strive against the all-powerful tyrant (fate). The mighty lion when stung by the ant roars aloud in agony.

The infuriated elephant when pricked by a thorn shrieks from pain.

[It was on Friday, the last day of Zūl Hijjah that this battle took place

At the end of eighty-three and the beginning of eighty-four].²

The sun and moon wept over the face of that one of auspicious features,

Day and night wept over the youth of that short-lived one.

Like his orders, tears from the eyes, flowed from east to west

Behold the obedience of the servants³ who wept without any master.

In his reign birds and fishes were so happy

That the fishes wept in the water and the birds in the air.

The heavens with its thousand eyes wept over the people of the earth like vernal showers upon the grass.⁴

The dew which falls every morning from heaven and waters the earth, consider that as the tears of the stars who are weeping in the highest heavens.

The people of Multān, men and women, weeping and tearing their hair, in every street, face to face and every where.

No one could sleep at night for the noise of the wailing, and the beating of the drums, for in every house the mourners were weeping bitterly.

Accordingly Sultān Balban, who was very depressed and dejected at this occurrence, so that day by day his weakness gathered strength, as he lay on his bed of sickness, being moreover past eighty years of age, conferred upon the eldest son of the Martyred Khān who was called Kaikhusrū, the title of Khusrū Khān, and gave the affairs of Empire into his hands. Multān too was entrusted to him, and he made him the heir-apparent, and made a will to the effect that Kaiqubād the son of Bughrā Khān should be sent to his father in Lakhnautī. After his death, however, the Kotwāl and his people who for some private reason (از جهتی که آن بکشف احوال عورات دارد) had been unfriendly to the Martyr prince, were apprehensive of danger if Kaikhusrū succeeded, so they sent him to Multān and placed the son of Beghrā Khān, Kaiqubād on the throne with the title of Mu'izzu-d-Din (Elliott III. 124).

At the end of the month of Zūl Hījjah in the abovementioned year, news arrived that the Tatār infidels whose leader was İtimar had attacked Lahore and the frontier of Multān. The Sultān appointed Shāhik Bārbak with thirty thousand cavalry and giving him the title of Khān-i-Jahān despatched him to oppose them. He pursued the Tatārs as far as the foot of the Jūd hills, and put the greater number of them to the sword, or made them prisoners, and having repulsed them he came to the Court.

Inasmuch as Sultān Kaiqubād, during the lifetime of Sultān Balban, had not attained the desires of his heart, and learned instructors had been placed in charge of him, at this time when he attained to the Empire finding himself completely unfettered he occupied himself with the full fruition of lustful delights, while the majority of the people took advantage of the luxuriousness of his reign to spend their days in wantonness and license. The ministrants of debauchery, jesters, singers and jugglers were admitted to close intimacy in his Court, in marked contrast to his grandfather's reign, and learning, and piety, and integrity were nothing valued; and Malik Nizāmu-d-Dīn 'Alāq seeing that the Sultān was immersed in luxury and enjoyment, and utterly careless of his kingdom's affairs, stretched forth the hand of oppression and went to unwarranted lengths. The vain desire of sovereignty came into his heart, so that he set about devising the downfall of the family of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn. In the first instance having instigated Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn to murder Kai Khusrū the son of Sultān Muḥammad the Martyr, he summoned him from Multān, and in the town of Rohtak raised him to the dignity of martyrdom and sent him to join his father.

In the same way he accused Khwāja-i-Jahān of an imaginary crime and had him publicly paraded on an ass through the city, he also imprisoned the Amir and Maliks of the house of Balban who were related to the Mughals who had recently become Moslems, and deported them to distant fortresses, and destroyed the glory of Mu'izzu-d-Dīn.

Sultān Nāsiru-d-Dīn Bughrā Khān, when the tidings of his son's ruinous condition reached him in Lakhnauti, wrote a letter full of hints couched in the language of enigma and innuendo to Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn warning him of the sinister intentions of Nizām-u-l-Mulk. Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn out of the hot-headedness of youth, did not act on his father's advice, and after much correspondence it was decided that Sultān Nāsiru-d-Dīn should leave Lakhnauti, and Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn should start from Dihli and that they should visit each other in Oudh.

From what Mir Khusrū may the mercy of God be upon him, says in the Qirānu-s-Sa'dain,¹ and also from the *Tārikh-i-Mubārak Shāhi*² we learn that Bughrā Khān, on his accession to the throne of Bengālā with the title of Nāsiru-d-Dīn, was coming with a large gathering to attack Dihli, and Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn also having collected his forces from the neighbouring districts advanced against him in the direction of Oudh; and since the river Sarū³ lay between them the son alighted on this side and the father on the other side, and neither was able to cross the river. The Amīrs and Malīks of Ghīyāṣu-d-Dīn's party, intervened with advice to come to peaceful terms, and Sulṭān Nāṣīru-d-Dīn with a party of special retainers crossed the river, as it had been agreed that the son should sit upon the throne, and the father, standing below the throne, should pay the customary dues of reverence and respect to him. Sulṭān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn from excess of desire forgot that compact, and on the instant his eyes fell upon the splendid presence of his father he came down from his throne and running barefooted, was about to fall at his feet. The father, however would not permit this, whereupon each embraced the other and for a long time they wept bitterly, and in spite of all the father's attempts to take his stand at the foot of the throne, the son forcibly took him by the hand, and led him to the throne and seated him upon it. Then he also took his seat, and after a long time the Sulṭān Nāṣīru-d-Dīn returned to his own camp, and sent as presents to his son a large number of famous elephants and very many extremely valuable presents and curiosities, and priceless treasures from the country of Lakṣnautī. The son also sent to his father an equal number of Persian horses, and other kinds of valuable articles and cloth goods, and rare and unique presents such that the accountant of imagination is unable to estimate their number and value; and all sorts of delight and pleasure burst upon the Amīrs of Ghīyāṣu-d-Dīn and Nāṣīru-d-Dīn and Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, and upon high and low of the armies, and the Malīks of both parties exchanged visits: Mir Khusrū relates in detail this meeting¹ in the Qirānu-s-Sa'dain, and in another place he writes in a qaṣīda:

Hail! to the happy kingdom when two kings are as one.

Hail! to the happy era when two truths are as one.

Am-i-Akbarī II. 305 gives an account of the meeting of father and son. For the river Sarjū, see Tieff. I. 250, 259, 260, 291, also plate XIX. facing page 292, in which the confluence of the Sarjū and Ghāgra is shewn as it was in 1768.

The Qirānu-s-Sa'dain fixes the meeting between father and son as having taken place at Ajūdhyā on the banks of the Ghāgra.

Behold ! the son is a monarch, the father a Sultān, Behold the glorious kingdom now that two kings are as one.
'Tis for the sake of kingship and world enslaving power,
That for the world, two world-protecting kings become as one.

One is the Nāsir of the age, the king Maḥmūd Sultān,
Whose edict in the four parts of the world is still as one.
The other is Mu'izzu-d-Dīn the world's king Kaiqubād,
In whose grasp Irān and Turān are welded into one.

And this is his also—

Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dunyā wad Dīn Kaiqubād Shāh Hast thou ever seen one who is the light of the eyes of four kings

On the last day ¹ when Sultān Nāsir-u-d-Dīn came to bid farewell in the presence of Malik Nizāmu-l-Mulk and Qiwāmu-l-Mulk, who were both of them counsellors and closely bound up with the Government, he gave Mu'izzu-d-Dīn many good pieces of useful advice on all subjects, with exhortation, and examples and instances, and first of all warned him against excess in wine and venery, then spoke of his carelessness with regard to state matters, and rebuked him severely for killing his brother Kai Khusrū and the other noted Amīrs and Maliks of the adherents of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn; then he exhorted him to be continually given to prayer and to perform the fast of Ramazān, and to keep all the principal tenets of the Musulmān religion, and taught him certain fixed rules and essential regulations of sovereignty. At the time of taking his departure he whispered in a low tone telling him to get rid of Nizāmu-l-Mulk 'Alāqa as soon as possible, "for" said he "if he gets a chance at you it is small chance you will get" this much he said, and they bid one another farewell with great emotion, and Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn for a few days remembered his father's injunctions, and gave up his vicious pleasures, but when he had travelled a few stages the merry courtesans and all kinds of enticing musicians and enchanting jugglers, subverters of piety, skilled and clever, crowded round him on all sides, and enticed his feet from the firm path of fortitude and self-restraint, by all sorts of gallantries and coquetries, and sense-ravishing gestures and allurements.

The bitter parting advice of his father did not find place in his heart

For this reason that his heart was inclined to sweets of pleasure.

And the elephant saw Hindustān¹ in its dreams and he broke through his forced repentance; which was as filmy as the web of a spider, at the first provocation, and used to say, "Which advice?² and what counsel?" 162

I will not give up the delights of to-day for tomorrow
Let tomorrow bring what it may, say to it "Bring it."

In opposition to this view is the following,

It befits not a king to be drunken with wine
Nor become entangled in lust and desire;
The king should be always the guardian of his people,
It is a sin that a guardian should be drunken.
When the shepherd becomes full of new wine
The flock sleeps in the belly of the wolf.

Heavy cups of wine used he to drink from the hands of the light-living cup bearers, and used to snatch a portion from his short ephemeral existence, and in this state malicious time used to foretell this calamity,³

Oh thou whose reign is the reign of faithless friends
From thy love springs hate, from thy honour disgrace,
Thou art as full of turmoil, but as empty, as the drum;
Lasting for one night like the candle, and for one day like the rose.

In this licentious mode of life he made his way to Dihli where he arrived in the year 689 H. (1290 A.D.). There certain of his notable Amirs became suspicious of his intentions, and withdrew Sher Khān¹ who was one of their number repented and returned, and was thrown into a prison which he only left to go to the prison house of the grave, the others were punished. They bestowed upon Firoz Khān ibn Yaghrash the Khilji, who eventually obtained the title of Sultān Jalāl-u-d-Dīn, the title of Shāyista Khān,² and entrusted the district of Baran³ to his control; accordingly he formed a plot by which he got Malik Hīmār Kachhan, who had treacherously attempted to slay him, into his power, and took vengeance on him for the deed which he had failed to accomplish. Then was seen the truth of the proverb "He who digged a pit for his brother is fallen into it himself."

Thou hast digged a pit in the way⁴ that thou mayest overthrow others.

Dost thou not fear lest one day thou should'st find thyself in the midst of it?

This was the plan which Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn carried into effect. He was very anxious to act upon the advice of his father and remove Nizāmu-l-Mulk 'Alāqa, so he in the first instance appointed him to Multān, but Nizāmu-l-Mulk saw through this device, and kept making excuses for delaying his departure, whereupon certain of the king's retainers at a hint from him, poisoned Nizāmu-l-Mulk's cup, and despatched him to the land of non-existence. It so happened that this occurrence became a cause of injury to the State. At this same time the Sultān was attacked by paralysis⁵ from his excesses in wine and venery, in addition to which other deadly ills and chronic diseases obtained the mastery over his body, and his constitution not being able to stand against them, his powers succumbed. The greater number of the Amirs and Maliks who were well disposed to him raised his son

In the year 688 H. (1289 A.D.) they made terms with Shāyista Khān who had distanced all his rivals.² Accordingly he ordered all his kinsmen and retainers whom he had summoned from Baran,³ and had stationed fully armed and equipped in readiness on the other side of the river, to cross the river Jumna and prepare to contest the day with their enemies. Certain of the Amirs of the party of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn and Mu'izzu-d-Dīn came out to oppose him with elephants and a large gathering, and having placed a royal umbrella over the head of Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, who was reduced to a shadow by weakness and emaciation, displayed him from afar off from the summit of the palace of Kilūgharī where he was but barely visible, and made obeisance to him.⁴ In the meantime Malik Chhajū, brother's son to Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn, who had acquired the title of Kishlī Khān cried out "I wish to place Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn upon a boat and take him to his father at Lakhnauti and remain myself in the service of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Kai Kāūs"—In spite of this the people of Dihli, from the highest to the lowest, came to the assistance of Shamsu-d-Dīn, and having assembled in front of the Budāon gate stood up⁵ to oppose Shāyista Khān in battle, and since the sons of Maliku-l-Umarā Fakhru-d-Dīn Kotwāl had been taken prisoners in the fight with Shāyista Khān, and Malik Himār Surkhā, who had plotted with the servants of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn to kill Shāyista Khān and carry off Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn (Kai Kāūs),⁶ had fallen by the hand of Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn son of Shāyista Khān; accordingly Maliku-l-Umarā (Fakhru-d-Dīn) opposed the people and prevented their assembling as they desired, till at last the adherents of Shāyista Khān removed Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Kai Kāūs from the throne by force and carried him off to Bahāpūr,⁷ where Shāyista

This occurrence took place in the middle ² of the month of Muḥarram in the year 689 H. (1209 A.D.).³ The duration of the sovereignty of Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Din was three years and some months.

At one time it feeds you with kindness at another poisons

We learn from the Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī ⁴ that Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Din, after the capture of the Shāh-zāda, was seized while sitting in darbar during that revolt of the populace, and was bound, and died in captivity of hunger and thirst: in the course of his sufferings he wrote this quatrain,

The horse of my excellence has been left far behind on the plain.
The hand of my generosity has fallen between the hammer and the anvil.
My eye which used to see the gold of the mine and the invisible jewel
To-day alas ! is blinded for lack of bread.

And when the tumult between Itimar Surkha and the people of Dihli subsided, and Shāyista Khān had gained his heart's desire and seated the prince upon the throne, and had set the affairs of the kingdom going again, on the second day after this, Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Din bade farewell to this transitory ⁵ unstable

SULTĀN SHAMSU-D-DĪN KAI KĀS.

The son of Mu'izzu-d-Din Kaiqubād nominally ascended the throne¹ in Bahāpūr in the year already mentioned, by the co-operation of Shāyista Khān and Malik Chhajū; and the uncle of Shāyista Khān, named Malik Husain, who had kept quiet at Kilūghari during the disturbances, for the safe custody of Sulṭān Mu'izzu-d-Din, had established great confidence. Shāyista Khān made Malik Chhajū Kishli Khān undertake the duties of Regent, and handing over the young prince to his charge, made a request on his own behalf for the districts of Tiberhinda, Debālpur, and Multān, and asked permission to depart thither; Malik yielding up the Regency and Vazirship to Shāyista Khān² asked for the district of Karra for himself. Shāyista Khān immediately acceded to his request, and conferred on him a robe of honour, and some days later allowed him to proceed to Karra, and Maliku-l-Umarā Fakhrud-Din Kotwāl having congratulated Shāyista Khān on his accession to such high office and great prosperity was instrumental in obtaining permission for Malik Chhajū to leave.

166.

Shāyista Khān used to bring the prince into the durbār hall and used himself to give audience and to regulate the important affairs of state. After a month or two, he brought Sultān Shamsu-d-Din on horseback to the palace of Kilūghari, and imprisoned him, and giving him as his fellows the inhabitants of the prison-house of the grave, sent him to the secret abode of destruction.

SULTĀN JALĀLU-D-DĪN IBN YAGHRASH KHILJĪ

167. Whose name was Malik Firoz and his title Shāyista Khān, came to the throne in the year 689 H. as has already been said, with the consent and assistance of Malik Chhajū Kishli Khān; and inasmuch he had previously been regent and governor of the kingdom² the affairs (of state) all devolved upon him.

It must not be forgotten that although Shihābu-d-Din Ḥakīm Kirmānī Jaunpurī,³ the author of the history called Tabaqāt-i-Mahmūd Shāhī, deduces the pedigree of Sultān Jalālu-d-Din and Sultān Mahmūd Mālwi from the stock of Qālij Khān, son-in-law of Chaugiz Khān, there is a long story connected with this. This at least is clear that this ancestry has no real authority, any one of sound judgment will be able to detect the falsity of his claim to this descent; and as a matter of fact there is no connection whatever between Qālij and Khalj, in spite of the fact that Qālij has too rough a sound for the Turki tongue, and if it had any equivalent (of sufficient softness) it would be Qalj⁴ with the meaning of a sword and in some histories it is said that Khalj is the name of one of the sons of Yāfiṣ, (Japhet) the son of Nūḥ (Noah) on whom be peace and that the Khiljis descend from him. God knows the truth of this. To make a long story short, Sultān Jalāl-u-d-Dīn divided the greater portion of the valuable appointments between his sons and brothers, and bestowed the following titles—upon his eldest son the title of Khān Khānān, upon his second son that of Arkali Khān, and on his youngest son that of Qadr Khān, while he gave to his uncle Malik Ḥusain the title of Tāj-u-l-Mulk. In this same way he bestowed various titles upon others, and allotted them estates, and having built a new town, and a new garden on the banks of the Jumna opposite to the Mu'izzī palace he called it a citadel, "The Rocky Citadel"; when it was completed it was called "Shahr-i-nau" (New-town)¹ and in Sha'bān, of the second year after his accession, Malik Chhajū Kishli Khān went to Karra, and became openly rebellious. The Amirs of the party of Ghīyāṣ-u-d-Dīn who held estates in that district joined with him, came to Budāon and crossed the Ganges by the ford of Bijlāna with the intention of attacking Dihlī, waiting for the arrival of Malik Chhajū who was to come by way of Karra,² (and)³ Sultān Jalāl-u-d-Dīn left Khān Khānān in Dihlī and marched against them. Dividing his forces into two army corps he himself went by way of Kol, and reached Budāon,⁴ sending Arkali Khān towards Amroha to oppose Malik Chhajū. Arkali Khān fought the enemy valiantly in many engagements during several days on the banks of the Rahab. In the meantime the people of Bairām Dev the Raja of Kola, which was also called Koela, gave information to Malik Chhajū that Sultān Jalāl-u-d-Dīn was in pursuit of him, and having frightened him exceedingly, urged him to take to flight. He was in such dread of the Sultān, that he did not know his head from his heels, and in the dead of night he made his escape, but eventually fell into the hands of the Kuwārs.⁵ Arkali Khān crossed the Rahab,⁶ despatched Bairām

Dev to hell, and pursued Malik Chhajū, and took him prisoner together with some of the other Amirs of the Qhiyāsi faction. Then he went in the direction of Bahārī and Kasam Kūr, which is the same as Shamsābād,¹ and when they took Malik Chhajū and the other captive Balbanī Amirs in fetters and chains² into the presence of the Sultān, he called to mind their old ties of relationship, and loosed them from their bonds, sent them to the baths, clothed them in rich garments of honour, and made them partake of his own table, sending Malik Chhajū with the greatest marks of respect to Multān.

169. Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn who was the brother's son and son-in-law of the Sultān,³ and had been appointed to the district of Karra, and Ilmās Beg, the brother of 'Alāu-d-Dīn who subsequently became Ulugh Khān⁴ was appointed to the post of Akhor Beg. In the meanwhile, the summons which is distasteful to all reached Khān-i-Khānān. The Sultān was greatly distressed at his loss. Mir Khusrū wrote the following dirge in memory of him :—

What day is this that I see not the sun shining,
If night has come why do I not see the brilliant moon.
Since two days my sun has remained behind the clouds,
So that in my eyes I see nothing but clouds and rain.
In Hindustān an evident danger has appeared,

And in the year following, Arkali Khān came from Multān to Dihli, and the Sultān leaving him in Dihli proceeded to Mandāwar, and after his arrival at that stage, having received with anxiety tidings of the revolt of certain of the Ghiyāsi Amirs, he made over the district of Budāon to Malik Maghlaṭi,¹ sent him off at once and appointed Malik Mubārak to Tiberhindah, then after reducing the fortress of Mandāwar proceeded by an uninterrupted series of marches to Dihli; and in those days a certain Saiyyid ascetic and recluse, holding close communion with God,² relying upon Him, bountiful,³ adorned with so many excellencies and perfections, Sidi Maulā⁴ by name first came from 'Ajām (Persia) to Ajūdhan in the service of the pillar of the Saints the master Shaiḥ Farīd, Ganj-i-Shakkar, may God sanctify his resting place, and sought permission to proceed to the eastern parts of Hindustān. They said to him "Beware of crowds of men, and abstain from intercourse with kings." When he reached Dihli, Khān-i-Khānān, the eldest son of the Sultān, displayed the greatest desire to become his disciple.⁵ In the same way the greater number of the deposed Maliks and Amirs of the Balban party⁶ used daily both morning and evening to sit at the table of that darvesh, who would not accept anything from any one. People used to credit him with alchemistic powers, and used to come in such crowds that a thousand mans of fine flour and five hundred mans of freshly skinned meat, and three hundred mans of sugar used to be the daily expenditure of the Shaikh which he expended in alms; the aforesaid Sidi although he engaged always in vigils¹ and the prayers of the five stated times, was, however, never present at the public prayer on Fridays, nor was he bound by the conditions of public² worship in accordance with established custom, and Qāzī Jalālu-d-Dīn Kāshānī (and)³ Qāzī Urdū and men of note, and trusted chiefs, and all both great and small, used continually to worship at his monastery.

171. When this news reached the Sultān, the story goes that one night he went in disguise to his monastery, and saw for himself that he expended even more than was reported. Accordingly the next day he held a grand durbār and ordered Sidi Maulā with the Qāzī and the other Amīrs who were his disciples, to be brought before him with ignominious treatment of all kinds, bound in fetters and chains. He enquired into the state of the case, and asked each one whether the Sidi laid claim to kingly power. The aforesaid Sidi denied it, and fortified his denial with an oath, but to no purpose. At that time Qāzī Jalālu-d-Dīn lay under the Sultān's displeasure, he also denied the allegation. The Sultān deposed him, and nominated him as Qāzī of Budāon. In order to verify the claims to Saiyyidship, and to test the miraculous powers of the Sidi, he had a huge fire like that prepared by Nimrūd (for Abraham) lighted, and wished to have Sidi Maulā thrown into that temple of fire. The Ulama of the time, in consideration of the irreligious nature of that order, issued a mandamus which they communicated to the Sultān saying, "The essential nature of fire is to consume things, and no one can issue forth from it in safety unhurt." The Sultān accordingly desisted and gave up that ordeal, but he punished the larger number of those Maliks in that same assembly, and some he expatriated; and inasmuch as the answers of Sidi Maulā⁴ were all in accordance with reason, and no fault could be found with him either on the score of religious law or logic, the Sultān was reduced to extremity, and suddenly turning to Abū Bakr Tūsi Haidari who was the chief of the sect of Qalandars, and utterly unscrupulous, he said "Why do not you darveshes avenge me of this tyrant," thereupon a Qalandar leapt up from their midst, and struck the unfortunate Sidi several blows with a razor and wounded him, then they shaved off the holy man's whiskers¹ with a knife even to the chin, and stabbed him in the side² with sackmakers' needles, and then, by command of Arkali Khān, the second son of the Sultān, an elephant driver drove a rogue elephant over the head of the poor oppressed Sidi, and martyred him with countless tortures may God be gracious to him. They say that this same Sidi, for a whole month before this occurrence used to sing these verses at all times, smiling the while he sang:

In the kitchen of love, they slay naught but the good;
The weak natured, and evil disposed they kill not.
If thou art a sincere lover, flee not from slaughter,
He whom they slay not is no better than a corpse.

And just at this time, on the very day of his murder, a whirlwind black with dust arose, and the world was darkened; there was a scarcity of rain in that year, and such a famine occurred that the Hindūs, from excess of hunger and want, went in bands and joining their hands threw themselves into the river Jumna, and became the portion of the alligator of extinction. Many Muslims also, burning in the flames of hunger, were drowned in the ocean of non-existence, while the rest of the world took these signs and events as proofs of the verity of Sidi and as evidence of his sincerity. Although no inferences can be drawn from facts of this kind, since they may finally prove to be only coincidences, still I myself have seen with my own eyes examples of such incidents, as shall be related in their proper places if God so will it.

God has never cursed any nation

The remainder of the accused, at the intercession of Arkali Khān, were delivered from the danger which threatened their lives, and from the punishment intended by the Sultān; and in this same year the Sultān for the second time marched against Rantanbhor, and destroyed the country round it, and overthrew the idols and idol-temples, but returned without attempting to reduce the fort. Arkali Khān went to Multān without his permission, at which the Sultān was very vexed.

In the year 691 H. the Mughuls under Chingiz Khān came up against Hindustān with a very large army, and fought a very severe battle with the Sultān's victorious forces in the neighbourhood of Sanām. When the Mughuls became aware of the size of the army of Hindustān they began to make overtures for peace. The Sultān thereupon summoned their leader, who was very closely related to Halākū Khān, and also his son, who called the Sultān his father. They accordingly had an interview and exchanged gifts and presents and each returned to his own country : 173. and Alghū¹ the grandson of Chingiz Khān, embraced Islām, and several thousand Mughuls besides followed his example and having learnt to repeat the sacred and blessed formula, elected to remain in the service of the Sultān. Alghū was selected for the honour of becoming son-in-law to the Sultān. The Mughuls took up their abode in Ghiyāspūr in which is now the sacred tomb of the Prince of Holy men Nizāmū Auliya² may God sanctify his resting place. It is commonly known as Mughulpūr and those Mughuls were called the "new Muslims."

At the close of this same year the Sultān having gone up against the fort of Mandāwar ravaged and pillaged the country round it and then returned. 'Alāu-d-Din the Governor of Karra, obtained permission in that year to proceed to Bhilsa³ and attacked that country⁴ and brought much booty thence to present to the Sultān, and the idol which was the object of worship of the Hindūs, he caused to be cast down in front of the gate of Badāon to be trampled upon by the people.⁵ These services of 'Alāu-d-Din being highly approved,⁶ the jāgīr of Oudh also was added to his other estates ; and since 'Alāu-d-Din was very angry and incensed against the Sultān's consort, who was his mother-in-law, and against the daughter of the Sultān, because she always made a practice of speaking ill of him to her father, he was anxious, on any pretext whatever, to leave the Sultān's dominions and go to a distance, and find some place of refuge for himself; accordingly he provided himself with new servants, and making all preparations as to personal clothing and furniture, he asked the Sultān¹ to bestow upon him the district of Chanderi, and leaving Dihli came to Karra, and from there under the pretence of attacking Chanderi, he went by way of Illichpūr, and made for the frontiers of the country of Deogir; leaving Malik 'Alāu-l-Mulk who was one of his friends, as his deputy in Karra, and having instructed him to temporise with the Sultān, went off somewhere unknown to anyone, and when no news could be obtained of Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn's whereabouts for a considerable time, the Sultān was exceedingly sorry.² Suddenly news arrived that 'Alāu-d-Dīn having gone up against the rebel Deo Gir, had conquered the whole of his country as far as the confines of the country of the Deccan, and had taken as spoil much treasure, and elephants and property, several thousands of horses, together with valuables; silk and cloth goods, and jewels, beyond the limits of computation, and that he was making for Karra. This was a source of great gratification to the Sultān, but the wise men of those times knew very well, both from analogy and inference, that 'Alāu-d-Dīn³ had gone to that country without permission from the Sultān, and had suffered much annoyance at the hands of Malika-i-Jahān who was the consort of the Sultān, and also from his own wife, and had accordingly faced the world, always nursing in his breast sinister intentions. Now⁴ that he was in a position perfectly to put his rebellious ideas into execution, and had not the access to the Court, it was strange that the Sultān seemed to suffer no apprehension as regarded him; but no one dared represent these views to the Sultān, who was wholly and entirely ignorant of the annoyance which 'Alāu-d-Dīn had suffered at the hands of the Queen-mother and his own wife, and if by chance they ventured to speak¹ of the possibility of the revolt and treachery of 'Alāu-d-Din, the Sultān attributed it to jealousy, and would never allow the idea of his contumacy or rebellion to enter his head.

In short, at the time when the Sultān was in the neighbourhood of Gwālār he summoned a council of his Amīrs to deliberate about 'Alāu-d-Din and said,² "What in your opinion is 'Alāu-d-Din's object in coming hither with so great display and circumstance, what will he do and what ought I to do? shall I go to meet him by way of Chanderi or shall I remain where I am, or again shall I return to Dihli?" Malik Aḥmad Chap who was a Vazīr of sound judgment and ripe experience and loyal to the backbone, did all he could to warn the Sultān by adducing logical arguments and quoting precedents, reminding him of the revolt of Malik Chhājū and the mutiny of the inhabitants of Karra, events which were of recent occurrence, as testifying to the probabilities of the present position, and urged him to go out to meet 'Alāu-d-Din on the way by which he would arrive, and to put an end to his ostentatious display and pompous arrogance, to seize his elephants and property, and all the things which were likely to be of use; but the Sultān would not listen to his advice, and launching forth into extravagant eulogy of 'Alāu-d-Din declared that his mind was perfectly at ease on his account in every possible way, "for is he not" (said he) "my protégé³ and foster child, he can never harbour any evil designs against me." Malik Fakhr-u-d-Din, and the other Amīrs also went with oily speeches to the Sultān, and brought forward all sorts of absurd arguments simply to suit the humour of the Sultān, and adducing weak examples induced him to return to Dihli; Malik Aḥmad Chap rose up in wrath from that assembly, and spoke as follows: "If Malik 'Alāu-d-Din with all this⁴ pomp and royal display has arrived at Karra and crossing the river Sarū makes for Lakhnauti, I do not know what can be done by any one to oppose him," and lamenting exceedingly the condition of the Sultān he repeated the following lines—

The Sultān then came from Gwālīār to Dihlī, and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having reached Kaṛṛa¹ wrote despatches full of craft and cunning to the Court, and worked upon the avarice of the Sultān by presents of elephants and endless wealth, and begged for a kindly worded letter summoning him to the Court, while all the time he was engaged in preparations to start for Lakhnauti, and having sent his brother² Zafar Khān to Oudh ordered him to hold in readiness all the boats on the river Sarū. The simple minded Sultān Jalālū-d-Dīn wrote a command with his own hand in accordance with 'Alāu-d-Dīn's request and sent it³ by the hand of two confidential and trusted body servants, one of whom was named Imādu-l-Mulk and the other⁴ Zīāu-d-Dīn. These men when they arrived soon perceived by his manner and bearing⁵ that the face of affairs was altered⁶ and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having prepared the dish for the Sultān, and having arranged for its service at a given signal, handed over⁷ those two messengers to sentries who were charged to keep them so closely guarded that not even a bird should be able to flap its wings near them, then he wrote a letter to Ilmās Beg his brother, who was also a son-in-law of the Sultān,⁸ and sent it to Dihlī, couched in these words: "Inasmuch as in the course of this expedition, I have committed many unwarranted acts, in that without taking the orders of the Sultān I proceeded to Deogīr, for this reason certain persons have aroused fear in my heart and anxiety—but seeing that I am the loyal servant and son of the Sultān, if he will march lightly equipped and by rapid marches come and lay hands upon me, and carry me off I have nothing to urge against imprisonment, and if, as they have said the current rumours are true, and the Sultān's mind is in reality turned against me, I must perforce lay violent hands upon myself and efface myself from the world." When Ilmās Beg laid that ¹ letter before the Sultān, he on the instant sent ² Ilmās Beg to reassure 'Alāu-d-Dīn and gave him a promise that he himself would follow. Ilmās Beg embarked in a boat, and going like the wind over the surface of the water, ³ on the seventh day joined Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and urged him to proceed to Lakhnauti, ⁴ but certain of the wise and far-seeing companions of 'Alāu-d-Dīn said, "What need have we to go to Lakhnauti when the Sultān by reason of his excessive greed for the wealth of Deogīr, and the elephants and horses of that country will come here lightly equipped ⁵ in the very height of the rainy season. ⁶ At that time we will take any steps that may be necessary, ⁷ and whatever has to be done to meet the emergency, we have it all stored up and we will put an end to him on the spot." ⁸ Since the cup of the life of Sultān Jalālū-d-Dīn was full ⁹ and his heart was brim full of lust and greed for that fancied and ill-omened treasure, ¹⁰ and Fate too had rendered him deaf and blind, not one of these evil designs was perceived by him :

Verse.

If the listener will not turn his ear to counsel,
He will reap retribution from the high heaven.

The Sultān, whose life's boat had been wrecked by a contrary wind, and had been cast on the shore of destruction, arrived at Kārā on the 17th of the blessed month of Ramazān: and 'Alāu-d-Dīn, who had kept his forces in readiness, had crossed the river Ganges between Kārā and Manikpūr and had pitched his camp: then he sent Ilmās Beg to the Sultān, sending by him some valuable jewels, with strict orders to use all the means he could devise and all the craft he could command to separate the Sultān from his army and bring him to 'Alāu-d-Dīn. His confederate therefore went and presented himself before the Sultān, and with great craftiness and deceit, and with obsequious humility represented that² if he had not come 'Alāu-d-Dīn would have been utterly scared and would have escaped, "and to such an extent" said he, "have the evil speakers stuffed his ears³ with reports of the unkind and ill-disposed utterances of the Sultān, and filled his mind with fear, that even now fear and suspicion is by no means entirely removed from his mind."⁴ There is still a probability of that of which I spoke before, unless the Sultān should shew him some favour and kindness, and should re-assure him, and going alone, without any retinue, should take him by the hand and lead him here."

⁵The Sultān taking his blood-thirsty words for the truth, ordered the cavalry escort which accompanied him to remain halted where they were, and he himself, together with a small body of retainers armed and ready for battle, proceeded a short distance forward, going forth to meet Death, while the arch-

When they arrived near the bank of the river, the army of 'Alāu-d-Dīn was plainly visible drawn up in close order fully armed and equipped, and evidently expecting an engagement. Malik Khurram ⁴ the Vakildar said to Ilmās Beg "We left our army behind us at your instigation, and we laid down our arms, what is this that we see an army ready for action?" He replied "my brother wishes to review his army, and following his usual course, he wishes to make a proper display ⁵ before the Sultān, with an eye to future advantage," the Sultān in accordance with the saying "When fate comes the plain becomes narrow" ⁶ up to that moment even did not discover the deceit of his enemy, but of his own free will walked deliberately into the jaws of the dragon.

Verse.

and is quite occupied in that service¹ and he has been preparing food for breaking your fast, and to do honour to the arrival of his guest, and is now awaiting the honoured coming of the Sultān, so that he may be distinguished among his peers by the honour derived from the royal visit." The Sultān all this time was occupied in reading the sacred volume; they reached the river's bank by the time of afternoon prayer and he took his seat in the place they had made ready for him to sit in, and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having got every thing ready² came with a great gathering to pay his respects to the Sultān and fell at his feet.³ The Sultān smiling, with affection and kindness and love smote him a gentle blow on the cheek, and addressing him with great shew of fondness and clemency and warm-heartedness, began to give him words of counsel, and was talking to him affectionately and lovingly, reassuring him in every possible way, and seizing the hand of Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn was drawing him near. At this moment when the Sultān laid hold of his beard, and, kissing him, was shewing him marks of his special favour, and⁴ had given his hand into his, 'Alāu-d-Dīn seizing the Sultān's hand firmly, wrenched it, and gave a signal to a party of men who were confederate and had sworn together to murder the Sultān. Then Maḥmūd Sālim who was one of the scum of Sāmāna, aimed a blow with his sword at the Sultān and wounded him; on receiving that wound the Sultān made for the boat crying out as he ran: "Thou wretch 'Alāu-d-Dīn, what is this thou hast done!" At this juncture one Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn who had been a particular protégé of the Sultān ran behind him and inflicted a second wound which killed him; he then cut off his head and brought it to 'Alāu-d-Dīn.⁵ By 'Alāu-d-Dīn's orders, the head of the unfortunate oppressed and martyred monarch was placed upon a spear and carried round Karra and Manikpūr: from thence they took it to Oudh; and the body-servants of the Sultān who were in the boat were all put to death, some of them threw themselves into the river, and were drowned in the ocean of destruction. Malik Fakhr-d-Dīn Kūchī fell into their hands alive and was murdered. Malik Ahmad Chap having made prisoners of the Sultān's army brought it to Dihlī and ¹ pending the arrival of Arkalī Khān from Multān (he was the worthy son of the Sultān and fitted to succeed him in the kingdom) as a temporary measure, with the co-operation of Malika-i-Jahān, seated Qadr Khān, the youngest son of the Sultān, upon the throne of Dihlī, with the title of Ruknu-d-Dīn Ibrāhīm. The Amīrs and Maliks of Jalālu-d-Dīn's party came one and all to swear allegiance to him at his accession. He retained the name of King for one month. Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn lost no time,² but on the very day of the assassination of the Sultān, made open display of the insignia and emblems of royalty, and raising the imperial canopy over his own head ³ was addressed as Sultān and ⁴ in the middle of the rainy season marching uninterruptedly he made straight for the metropolis of Dihlī, and showering dīnārs and dirhems like rain over the heads of the populace, and pelting the people in the streets great and small with golden missiles from balistae and slings,⁵ came to his own garden on the banks of the Jumna and alighted there. Day by day the Amīrs of the Jalālī faction joined themselves to him and swore allegiance to him, and by the hope of the red gold, all regret for Jalālu-d-Dīn was completely effaced from their black hearts.

Liberality is the alchemy⁶ of the copper of faults;
Liberality is the remedy for all pain.

It is said that by the day when Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn reached Badāon sixty thousand sowārs had joined his standard, Malik Raknu-d-Dīn Ibrāhīm seeing that he had not the power to resist him went to Multān to Arkalī Khān, with certain chosen Amīrs who remained faithful after the massacre (of Jalālu-d-Dīn), and the whole of the kingdom fell under the dominion of 'Alāu-d-Dīn.

Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn took place in the seventeenth of the month of Ramaẓān in the year 694 H. (A.D. 1294) and the duration of his reign was seven years and some months.

Verses.

Hast thou seen the acts of the tyrant heaven and its star, Mention it not; what is the heaven, its revolution, or its arched vault?

How is it that the revolving heaven has cast the sun of the kingdom headlong into the dust,

Dust be on the head of his sun of glory.

Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn had a taste for poetry, and Amīr Khusrū after the death of Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Kaiqubād, came into the service of the Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn, and was honoured by being selected as an intimate companion, and was made Qur'ān-keeper to the Sultān, he was presented every year with the robes of honour which were reserved for the Amīrs of the Sultān¹ and were tokens of special distinction and peculiar trust.

In this same category were Amīr Ḥasan and Muḍ Jājarmī and Amīr Arslān Kātībī and Sa'd-i-Manṭiqī and Bāqī-i-Khaṭīb and Qāzī Mughīṣ of Hānsī, who is one of the most learned men of the time of Jalālu-d-Dīn and wrote a Ghazal in nineteen metres² of which this is the opening:—

Two pearly ears, a stately form, two lovely cheeks, with fresh youth dight,

Thy glory is the fairy's pride, a fairy thou, at glory's height.

And the rest of the learned men used to keep the Sultān's assembly embellished and adorned with the jewels of poeras, and delicate points of learning and philosophy, and the following few verses are the offspring of the Sultān's genius:—

غزل نوزده بسري. It would appear from the statement that this ghazal or ode was made up of nineteen lines, each of which was in a different metre.

The first of the above lines is either Mutaqārib or Ramal. This is called ذو بحرین Zūbaḥrāin (of two metres) in prosody.

The second line is in Ramal.

I do not wish those flowing locks of thine to be entangled
 I do not wish that rosy cheek of thine (with shame) to burn.
 I wish that thou one night unclothed may'st come to my embrace

Yes, loud I cry with all my might, I would not have it hidden.

And at the time when he was besieging Gwālīār he built a pavilion and a lofty dome¹ and wrote this quatrain as an inscription for that building:—

Quatrain.

I whose foot spurns the head of heaven,
 How can a heap of stone and earth augment my dignity?
 This broken stone I have thus arranged in order that
 Some broken heart may haply take comfort from it.

And Sa'd Manṭiqī and the other poets he ordered to point out to him the defects and beauties of this composition. They all praised it exceedingly and said! It has no fault, but he replied:
 You are afraid of hurting my feelings, I will point out its defect² in this quatrain:

It may be some chance traveller may pass by this spot
 Whose tattered garment is the satin mantle of the starless sky;³

Perchance from the felicity of his auspicious footsteps
 One atom may fall to my lot: this will suffice me.

His accession to the throne took place on the 16th Rāmāzān 695 H., and he arrived at Dihli on the 22nd of Zilhijjah of the same year.

The text has possibly been corrected to agree with this author's date. Barnī does not give the day of the month: nor does Firīšta. The latter tells us that on the death of Jalālu-d-Dīn, Malika-i-Jahān of her own accord set Qadr Khān the youngest son of Jalālu-d-Dīn on the throne, with the title of Ruknu-d-Dīn Ibrāhīm, and finding he was too young, sent to Multān to summon the second son Arkalī Khān, who refused to come hearing of 'Alāu-d-Dīn's success with the army.

² Barnī says that the title of Zafar Khān was conferred on Malik Hizabru-d-Dīn, (Elliott III. 157).

³ The text omits مقرر before داشته supplied from MS. (A).

⁵ Although the author has given no account of Qadr Khān's coronation he here gives him the title by which he was raised to the throne.

And in the year * 697 A.H. (1297 A.D.), Nuṣrat Khān having been appointed to the office of Vazīr, used strenuous efforts to recover the money which Sultān 'Alāu-d-Din had lavished in the commencement of his reign in order to gain over the affections of the people, and demanding the repayment of very large sums deposited them in the treasury; and having summoned from Kaṛra 'Alāu-l-Mulk the uncle of Ziāu-d-Din Barnī, the author of the Tārīkh-i-Firoz Shāhī (whom Sultān 'Alāu-d-Din had removed from the kotwālship of Dihli and had sent as governor to Kaṛra, appointing Nuṣrat Khān to the office of Kotwāl) he conferred upon him his old rank, Alp Khān being appointed to Multān. And in the year 698 A. H. (1298 A.D.) one Ṣaldi⁴ a Mughul commander, crossing the Indus came towards Hindustān, and Ulugh Khān and Tughlaq Khān the governor of Depālpūr (who is Ghāzi-i-Mulk), were appointed to put down that rising, and offered strong opposition to them⁵ on the confines of Jārin Manjhūr.⁷ The Mughul army was defeated, some of them were killed and others taken prisoners, and the army of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Din returned victorious with many spoils. A third time Targhī Mughul who was one of the margans,⁶ that is to say accurate archers of that country, accompanied by 100,000 infantry and 20,000 valiant and renowned cavalry, seized the fort of the hills, and gaining possession of that country, penetrated as far as the township of Baran, where Malik Fakhr-u-d-Din Amīr Dād the Governor was entrenched; Malik Tughlaq Ghāzi-i-Mulk was sent from the metropolis to put down that disturbance.⁷ Malik Fakhr-u-d-Din sallied from the fortress of Baran,⁸ joined with Malik Tughlaq, and they jointly made a night attack upon the Mughuls.⁹ The Mughul forces being routed, Targhī was taken prisoner and Malik Tughlaq brought him into the royal presence.

a very large army, which they divided into two, one bore down upon Nāgor,¹ while the other seized the fort of the Sirmūr hills and occupied the country as far as the river Biāh which they call Kālī Pānī.² Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn appointed Malik Mānik his slave (who is Kāfūr Nāib or Hazār Dinārī³) with Malik Tughlaq Governor of Depālpūr to proceed to Amroha; and while the Mughul army, having succeeded in capturing much spoil and many cattle, was marching to the banks of the river Rahab, Malik Mānik came up in pursuit⁴ and a severe battle ensued. Both the Mughul princes evinced great bravery, but were ultimately taken prisoners, and were put to death, while the greater part of those accursed ones became food for the sword of vengeance, and the remnant of the sword fled panicstricken to their own country. The heads of these two princes were taken to Badāon and impaled upon the battlements of the fort. One of the learned poets of that time wrote the following quatrain which was afterwards inscribed upon the southern gateway of that city. 186.

the *Tārīkh-i-Khazānu-l-Futūḥ*¹ a marvel of literature, which mortal powers confess themselves impotent to approach or imitate, though to tell the truth all the writings of that kind of poets, rightly named Khusrū, are of this excellence, and to praise and crown them is an impertinence and error for any other.

Whenever any thought shines forth from his mind
It is so subtle as to escape comprehension and defy imitation.

On the fifth occasion Iqbālmand and Kapak, Mughals, brought together an army to take vengeance for Turtāq² and 'Alī Beg, and invaded the frontiers of Multān. The Sultān on this occasion also appointed Malik Nāib, and Malik Tughlaq. They proceeded by forced marches while the Mughals were falling back, and pursuing them gave battle. Kapak was taken prisoner, but was ransomed by the infidel Tātārs, with the prisoners and abundant booty which had fallen into their hands.³ From that day the Mughals lost their enthusiasm for the conquest of Hindustān, and the teeth of their ambition became blunted.

187. After these victories, the Sultān one night was holding a wine party quite at his ease with his companions, and was quaffing copious draughts of wine. The night, like the circulation of the wine cup, had come near to an end; suddenly some of the assembled guests began to make signs to each other⁴ with hand, and eye, and brow that it was time to break up,⁵ the Sultān happened to perceive it, he was annoyed and cried out Mutiny! Mutiny! and on the instant gave orders for Bahā (who was one of his boon-companions and choice spirits) to be killed. The rest fled in confusion. On the following morning when he came to realise what had occurred, it was as clear as day to the Sultān¹ that his suspicion was groundless.

Wait, till the world removes the veil from the face of events,
And till that thou hast done this evening, tomorrow is plain to thee.

Then he asked for Qāzi Bahā.² They replied, He was sent into eternity at that very moment.³ The Sultān was very repentant and ashamed at hearing this, and vowed never again to drink wine, and ordered it to be proclaimed that the use of wine should be absolutely abandoned throughout the kingdom. Cask upon cask of wine was poured out in the court till it became a flowing river. Everyone who was discovered intoxicated, was hauled off to prison, and punished by imprisonment⁴ and confiscation of property.

Piety and penitence became the order of the day, the taverns were in ruins,⁵ and the police officers had plenty of work, and there was no longer any need to purchase vinegar,⁶ while the wine bibbers were giving expression by their actions to these verses :

188. And in the year 697 H. (1297 A.D.) the Sultān becoming suspicious of the newly-converted Muslim Mughuls was contemplating to murder and eradicate them, and they also for their part, goaded by the extortion of the revenue collectors and their extortionate demands for refunding money,¹ were plotting a rebellion whilst the Sultān should be hunting and hawking.² One of them who was opposed to this scheme made it known to the Sultān. Secret orders were written and despatched to the Governors of the country saying that on a certain day³ they should put to death all the new Muslim Mughuls with one consent wherever they found them.

Accordingly on the appointed date they despatched so many poor hapless Mughuls with the sword of injustice, and sent them on their travels to the kingdom of annihilation, that the mind cannot compute their number, and the name of Mughul no longer survived in Hindustān, although this custom of killing strangers has survived from that time.

And in the commencement of affairs, the fact of so many victories following one another in close succession led to extravagant ambitions in the mind of the Sultān; one of these was religious innovation, and moreover by the assistance of these four Ulugh Khān, Nusrat Khān, Zafar Khān and Alp Khān he was led to estimate himself as being superior to the Prophet on whom be the peace and blessing of God,⁴ and his companions may God be gracious to them all.⁵ The second was the conquest of the whole inhabited world like Sikandar; this led to his ordering his name to be inscribed on the currency and mentioned in the proclamation as Sikandar-i-ṣānī.⁶ When he sought the advice of 'Alāu-l-Mulk Kotwāl of Dihli he restrained the Sultān from pursuing both these claims and said, "No one can evolve a religion out of his own brain unless he be aided¹ by God, and till he can perform miracles² This object cannot be acquired by the strength of dominion, and wealth, and majesty, and splendour, moreover such an attempt may be expected, nay is certain to result in violent disorders and tumults of all kinds, nothing will be gained while disgrace will follow the attempt: as for conquering realms, it is a worthy ambition, but needs the highest qualifications, as well as perfection of rule and a vazir like Aristotle, none of which are here existent.

If the Sultān clears Hindustān of infidels and frees the environs of Dihli from these contumacious ruffians, this will be in no way inferior to the world conquests of Sikandar."

The Sultān, after due meditation, was greatly pleased with these proofs deduced from reason and supported by precedent, and bestowed a robe of honour upon 'Alāu-l-Mulk and gave him large rewards, and abstained from attempting to satisfy either of his ambitions. The Amirs, who on account of the harshness of the Sultān, and the roughness of his temper, were unable to say anything of service, all sent presents of horses and valuables for 'Alāu-l-Mulk and were loud in praise of him. 189.

- Khān, after Rāi Karan was defeated, ravaged and laid waste Nahr-wāla, and pursued him;¹ and Rāi Karan took refuge with Rāi Rāmdeo² who was the ruler of Deogīr, in the country of the Deccan. The family of Rāi Karan, with his treasury and elephants and all his possessions, fell into the hands of the Muslim warrior. Among the ladies of his harem was one Dewalrāni, of whom Khizr Khān the son of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn ultimately became enamoured. He related the account of his amours to Mir Khusrū for him to turn into verse, and the book of Khizr Khān and Dewalrāni, which is known as the 'Ashīqa', is in his name. Ulugh Khān carried off an idol from Nahrwāla (in place of the idol of Somnāt which Sultān Maḥmūd had carried³ to Ghaznin, and the Hindūs had made an object of their worship,) and took it to Dihlī where he caused it to be trampled under foot by the populace; then he pursued Rāi Karan as far as Somnāt, and a second time laid waste the idol temple of Somnāt, and building a mosque there retraced his steps.

Nusrat Khān having proceeded to Kuhanbāyat,⁴ a well-known post, seized much spoil of valuable goods and rubies and other jewels from the traders;⁵ Kāfūr Hazār Dinārī whom the Sultān Alāu-d-Dīn had latterly taken into close favour, and made Nājib-ul-Mulk, was part of that booty.

When Ulugh Khān arrived on the frontiers of Alwar he occupied himself with verifying the amount of property and spoil which had fallen into the hands of his people during these several battles, and exacted the giving up of much of it with great severity. A certain party of Mughals who accompanied him thought Cambay, in Gujerat. According to Hunter (Imp. During the 11th and 12th centuries, Cambay appears as one of the chief ports of the Auhelwāra (Nahrwāla) kingdom and at the conquest of that kingdom by the Musulmāns in 1297, it is said to have been one of the richest towns in India.

this rather unfair, and consequently plotted a rebellion, but eventually were dispersed; some of them went off to Rāi Hamir Dev in Jhāin,¹ which is near Rantanbhor, and some went elsewhere.

Ulugh Khān proceeded by continuous marches to his master at Dihli, and from this we gather that the massacre of the foreigners (above alluded to) took place after the arrival of Ulugh Khān from Gujrāt. Historians have paid little attention to the due order of events, but God knows the truth.

And in the year 699 H. (1299 A.D.) Ulugh Khān was nominated to proceed against the fortress of Rantanbhor and Jhāin, which is better known as Naushahr,² and Rāi Hamir Dev, the grandson of Rāi Pithora,³ who had ten thousand cavalry, and countless infantry, and celebrated elephants, gave him battle but was defeated, and with great generalship withdrew the whole of his forces into the fortress of Rantanbhor. 191

Ulugh Khān having reported ⁴ the state of affairs to the Court, urged the Sultān to capture the fort; the Sultān collected his forces ⁵ and marched against Rantanbhor, and in a short time, by skilful effort, and aided by the energy of his Maliks, completely subdued and took the fortress, and despatched Hamir Dev to hell. Great booty, and spoil, and treasures fell into his hands. Then he appointed ⁶ a Kotwāl to hold that fortress, and having bestowed the country of Jhāin upon Ulugh Khān, left to attack Chitor,⁷ and having conquered that place also within a few days, and¹ having given it the name of Khizrābād, and having bestowed a red canopy upon Khizr Khān aforesaid, made Chitor over to him as governor. Among the events which happened in this expedition this was one, that Nusrat Khān had come from Karṣa² to Rantanbhor, to reinforce Ulugh Khān before the Sultān arrived there;³ and during the siege one day a stone struck him on the head, and he went without delay to the other world. One arm of the Sultān, that is to say Zafar Khān, had been broken in the fight with Qutluq Khwāja, and now the second arm was broken also.

When the army was encamped in the neighbourhood of Malhab⁴ the Sultān one day was engaged in the hunting field;⁵ when night came on he remained in the plain, and at dawn of day he posted his troops all round, while he himself with a select following ascended an eminence and was watching the sport.⁶ In the meantime the brother's son of the Sultān, Akat Khān,⁷ together with a band of new-Muslim Mughuls who were engaged in performing the duties of guards, attacked the Sultān relentlessly and smote him with arrows, seized him and wounded his arm. As it was the winter season, and the Sultān was wearing a cap⁸ stuffed with cotton his wounds were not fatal. Akat Khān wished to alight from his horse and strike off the Sultān's head from his body, but some of the attendants pretending to side with him and take his part, cried out, the Sultān is killed! Akat Khān was satisfied at hearing this, and made off with all speed to the camp on horseback, and entering the royal hall of audience seated himself upon the throne, and drawing the canopy over his head, the Amīrs, in accordance with ancient custom, gave in their allegiance to him as the rightful king,¹ and raised no overt objection. Akat Khān was so overwhelmed by his inordinate lust that on the instant he made an attempt upon the ḥaram,² but Malik Dinar Ḥaramī who was on guard at the entrance to the ḥaram with his men armed and equipped, said, Till you shew me the head of the Sultān I will not permit you to set foot within this private chamber. Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, when he had somewhat regained consciousness³ after that perilous attack, bound up his wounds. He was convinced in his own mind that Akat Khān, in unison with the Amīrs who had revolted, had had the audacity to make this disgraceful attempt upon his life. for that were it not so, he was not the man to attempt it alone.

Accordingly his intention was to make his way to Jhāin (where Ulugh Khān was) with the fifty or sixty attendants who had remained with him, and see what course Ulugh Khān would recommend. One or two of his confidential retainers pointed out the unwisdom of this course and urged him to go at once to the royal pavilion and kingly court.

Before they arrived at the Court fifty horsemen joined them, and Akat Khān took the road to Afghānpūr, but a body of men who had been despatched in pursuit of him by forced marches made him prisoner,⁴ sent him into the Sultān's presence, and then utterly destroyed all his family and relations wherever they found them, among whom Qutluq Khān his brother also perished.⁵ 193.

If thou revoltest against thy benefactor
Even if thou art the sun, thou wilt fall headlong.

This further occurrence took place, namely, when the Sultān was engaged in besieging Rantanbhor, a person named Hāji Maulā, one of the slaves of Maliku-l-Umarā Kotwāl,² gathered together certain ruffians, displayed a counterfeit order in Dihli,³ entered the city by the Badāon gate, and sent for one Turmuḡi Kotwāl and in an instant cut his head off,⁴ closed the city gates, and sent a messenger to 'Alāu-l-Mulk⁵ a friend of his, who was Kotwāl of the New Castle, saying "An order has come from the Sultān, come and read it" 'Alāu-l-Mulk being fully alive to what was going on⁶ did not obey the summons, whereupon the rebel Hāji Maulā went to the Ruby Palace, and liberating all the prisoners, gave a horse and arms and a large bag (of gold) out of the treasury to each one, gathered together an immense following; then he seized by force Saiyyid Zāda-i-'Alawī Shāh Nabsa,⁷ who on his mother's side was descended from Sultān Shamsu-d-Din Altamsh (Iyaltimish), summoning his chief men and nobles for the purpose, and seated him upon the throne at

The Maulā set off from the Red Palace with a party of horse, and went to the house of the poor 'Alawī. They carried him off by force and seated him on the throne in the Red Palace. The principal men of the city were brought by force and made to kiss his hand.—(Elliot III. 176). The editor remarks that the passage in which he is called the grandson of Shāh Najaf is very doubtful.

the entrance to the Red Palace, and compelled the chief men whether they would or no, to swear allegiance to him.

The Sultān, when he heard this tidings, did not publish it, nor did he betray any signs of emotion, until he had succeeded by superhuman effort in entirely¹ reducing the fortress. A week had hardly passed after this exploit of Hāji Maulā when Malik Hamidu-Din, who was Amir of Koh, with his sons who were renowned for their valour, and a body of the cavalry of Zafar Khān who had come from Amrohā to oppose the Mughuls,² engaged Hāji Maulā in fight, and having destroyed him, put to death the hapless Saiyyid Zāda also, and sent their heads to Rantanbhor. The Sultān nominated Ulugh Khān to proceed to Dihli to track out those who had taken part in that³ rebellion, and bring them to destruction. He also completely eradicated the family and relations of Maliku-l-Umarā on this suspicion that Hāji Maulā would not have embarked on this enterprise without their instigation.⁴

The Sultān after adding the fortress of Rantanbhor and its surrounding districts to the jāegir of Ulugh Khān returned (to Dihli). Ulugh Khān was taken ill that very day while on the road, and died,⁵ and Rantanbhor became for him like the Paradise of Shaddād.⁶

Then he appointed thereunto a hundred men of his servants and mighty men of valour, and under the hand of each of them a thousand helpers, and bade them search out and find an open space of the plain in the land of Yemen, and choose the best thereof in soil. Then he provided them with wealth, and designed for them the pattern of their work, and wrote to his three chief lords Ghānim ibn-'Ulwān, Ḥabībāk ibn 'Ulwān, and Walīd ibnūr Raiyyān, and charged them to write to their lords in the utmost parts of their cities that they should collect all that was in their land of gold and of silver, of pearls and of rubies, of musk and ambergris and saffron, and should send them unto him. Then he sent unto all the mines, and took out therefrom all the gold and the silver that was in them, and he sent his three agents to the divers into the oceans, and they brought out therefrom jewels, and gathered them together as it were mountains, and all of this was brought to Shaddād. Then they sent the miners to the mines of rubies and emeralds and all other jewels, and they brought out from thence immense riches. Then he ordered and the gold was beaten and fashioned into bricks, and he builded therewith that city, and he commanded the pearls and the rubies, the onyx and the emerald and the cornelian, and the walls of the city were set with them. And he made for it upper chambers, and above them other chambers supported on columns, and to all of them pillars of emerald and of onyx and of ruby. Then he caused to flow beneath the city a wide channel which he brought to the city from beneath the earth a space of forty leagues, like to a large canal. Then he ordered, and there were made to flow from that channel, rivulets in the streets, and highways and streets flowed with clear water. And he ordered banks to be made for that canal and for all the rivulets, and they were overlaid with red gold, and the pebbles thereof were made of all kinds of precious stones, red and yellow and green. And there were planted on either bank of the stream and of the rivulets trees of gold bearing fruit, and the fruits of them were of those rubies and precious gems. And the length of the city was made twelve farsakhs and the breadth thereof like unto the length. And the walls of the city were high and lofty, and there were builded therein three hundred thousand palaces set with all kinds of jewels within and without. And he built for himself in the midst of the city on the bank of the canal a palace lofty and high, towering over all those palaces * was taken. When the Sultān asked Muḥammad Shāh (who had been wounded) 'If I should spare your life and have you cured, and you should thus escape this deadly danger, how would you treat me in future?' he replied, 'If I should get well and should have an opportunity, I would kill you and raise the son of Hamīr Dev to the throne.' The Sultān wondered, and was amazed at this audacity, and enquired of his most shrewd and astute Amīrs the reason why the people had so turned against him, and why these continual riots and seditions were so constantly occurring, and further sought to know how to set about remedying these evils. They shewed him several paths of conduct which would end naturally in four things. Firstly, that the king should in his own person be aware of the enterprises both good and bad which are going on in his kingdom. Secondly, that he should put an end to wine bibbing, which is the source of so much evil. Thirdly, abandonment by the maliks of their gadding about to each others' houses and holding deliberative meetings.¹ Fourthly, to demand back the money which he had lavished, from all classes, whether soldiery or populace, because it is the fountain head of all riot and sedition, especially upstarts and nouveaux riches,² and in a short time these regulations would by their inherent good, be acceptable to the Rāis, and pass from potentiality to actuality just as has already been related in a former place.

Then Almighty God wished to send a warning to him and to his host, calling him to repentance, and he chose to himself Hūd ibn Khālīd who came and called upon Shaddād to believe and confess the power and unity of God, but he persisted in his idolatry and disobedience. Then Hūd warned him of punishment to come and of the fall of his kingdom, but he would not be moved from his evil ways."

At last he was informed that the city was finished and he set out to go to it with three hundred thousand, leaving all his kingdom to his son Muṣṣad who had it is said believed in the words of Hūd. When Shaddād arrived with one day's journey of Iram a voice came from heaven, and he and all who were with him fell dead, not one remained, and all who were in the city died, the workmen and artificers, the agents and warriors, not a soul remained alive. And the city sank into the earth."

regulations also into force, and also published several new rules of his own, which have never been heard of either before or after his time, whether they were in accordance with religious law or not; one of these rules was that regulating the price of grain, and cloth, and horses, and all necessities essential to the comfort of the soldiery and populace, and the bestowal of rewards and alms upon all classes of the people, the detail of which is told at some length in the history of Ziā-i-Barni.¹ Those laws were the most extraordinary of all: this cheapness of provisions was one of the chief sources of the prosperity of the people, and formed a stout wall of defence against the irruption of the Mughuls. And inasmuch as in mentioning some of these events and occurrences in the original work,² the chronological sequence has not been preserved, and they have been only incidentally mentioned as occasion arose, for this reason they have also been recounted here in the same manner.

He gave 'Ainu-l-Mulk a signal with his brow
To turn his face towards the kingdom of Mālwa;
From the clear-sightedness which 'Ainu-l-Mulk possessed,
That which he ordered was brought into sight.

And placed round them sentinels like the eyelashes.⁵

booty beyond the limits of computation; Amir Khusrū who was with that army has given full particulars in the Khazānu-l-Futūḥ: some attributed these victories to respite before punishment, and some to the miraculous powers of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, while others held that the peace and security of that reign were due to the unbounded blessings of the Sultānu-l-Mashāikh Nizāmu-l-Auliya¹ may God² sanctify his resting-place.

At length when the Sultān's mind was satisfied, and he gained some leisure from the administration of the State, he set himself to provide for the future of his two sons, allotting to each one a province in the neighbourhood, and setting apart districts for them. Among other events was the marriage of Khizr Khān to Dewal Rāni, and Girāi's account is of a nature to last to all eternity, and those who have the taste may read the account of that in the 'Ashīqa';³ then having bestowed upon Khizr Khān the canopy and staff of office, and having made him his heir the Sultān sent him away to Hatnāpūr* and the foot of the hills. When affairs were settled,⁵ and the heavens began to act with their ingrained natural deceit, and commenced displaying those evil traits, and old age overcame the Sultān's health, his followers deserted him;

ill-temper, and suspiciousness, and causes the health to become deranged, gained the mastery over him, and when only such a small amount of health remained that it was like a single lamp to light the whole house, Khizr Khān in fulfilment of a vow he had made, in singleness of heart and sincerity of spirit set out from Hatnāpūr¹ barefooted upon a pilgrimage to the holy men of Dihli, and performed his thanksgiving for the restoration of his father's health, but it is a very strange fact that he never once went to visit the Sultānū-l-Mashāikh wal Auliya,

And Malik Nāib informed the Sultān of the coming of Khizr Khān with considerable embellishment, saying that Alp Khān, the maternal uncle of Khizr Khān, who had arrived from Gujrāt, out of policy and prudence, having regard to the affairs of the State and in his desire to become Nāib and Vakil, had himself summoned his sister's son, and further remarked that if this crude idea and immature desire had not fixed itself in the mind of Khizr Khān, why had he come unbidden to the Court?

The Sultān whose health was upset, and his brain disordered and disposed to entertain absurd prejudices, in according with the saying,² “When a man's health is disordered his fancies are disordered,” from his great lack of discrimination taking this suggestion as the actual fact, and regarding this assertion³ as the truth, instantly gave orders for the execution of Alp Khān.

Malik Nāib and Malik Kamālu-d-Dīn Kark seizing that unhappy wretch like a meek lamb, cut him to pieces inside the Royal palace. After that Malik Nāib induced the Sultān (on the ground that Khizr Khān had taken alarm at the murder of his uncle and that it was not expedient for him to return to his own place in the court), to issue instructions that, to allow of the restoration⁴ of order in the State, he should go for some 199 time to Amroha till a command should issue summoning him to the presence. In the meantime he might engage in hunting, and he was to return to the Court his canopy and staff of office, and all the other insignia of royalty. Khizr Khān having obeyed this order with a sad and distracted heart, after a little while relying upon the sincerity of affection he entertained for his father and the confidence between them, wrote to him to this effect,¹ that he had never committed any breach of trust which could cause the Sultān to be so wroth with him; then overcome by sorrow he determined to leave Amroha for Dihli. When he arrived to do obeisance to his father, the chord of fatherly affection was stirred in the heart of the Sultān, he clasped his son to his breast, and kissed him several times on the forehead, and motioned to him to go and see his mother. Khizr Khān went thither, and Malik Nāib out of villainy,² on the instant went back to the Sultān and filled his ears with lies, saying,³ ' Khizr Khān has now come for the second time to the palace with evil intentions without orders, and the Sultān takes no notice of the matter.' The Sultān upon this occasion gave orders to send both brothers, Khizr Khān and Shādi Khān, to the fortress of Gwāliar.⁴ Malik Nāib, after these two heirs had been deported, and the way was clear for Malik Shihābu-d-Dīn, the son of the Sultān by another mother, who was yet a lad of tender years, made him heir-apparent and exacted from him an agreement.

After two or three days the Sultān's life became intolerable through his affliction, and he would willingly have purchased a breath at the price of a world, but it was not to be had.

Khusrū was of Turki origin, his father Amīr Maḥmūd came to Dihlī during the invasion of Changīz Khān into the service of Sultān Muḥammad Tughlaq Shāh by whom he was advanced to high office, but was eventually murdered. Mīr Khusrū succeeded his father, but gave up office and became the devoted disciple of Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliya. His Khamṣa was written in imitation of the Khamṣa of Shaiikh Nizāmī.

With regard to the succession of Shihābu-d-Dīn, see Firishṭa, who describes him by the name of 'Umar Khān (Brigg's Firishṭa I. 383). His full name was Shihābu-d-Dīn 'Umar according to Mir Khusrū.

and Vazirs in the early part of the year 717, H.¹ and apportioning appointments and suitable jāegirs among his most trusted Amīrs, specially distinguished by promoting to high office one Ḥasan, Barāwar bacha,² who was very handsome, and had been brought as a captive from Mālwa. He had been the protégé of Malik Shādī Nāib-i-Khāss, the Hājib of Sultān ‘Alāu-d-Dīn.³

He gave him the title of Khusrū Khān. The tribe of Barāwar⁴ are a family of servile position in Gujrāt; but now in the kingdom of Dihli, the Sultān, to such an extent was he infatuated by his beautiful face, raised him, in spite of his unfitness for the office, to the trusted post of Vazir.

Verse.

If thou desirest thy kingdom to be glorious Give not high office to an upstart;
Unless thou wishest that thy state should be ruined
Entrust not thy affairs to the inexperienced.

And Sultān Quṭbu-d-Dīn, inasmuch as he had undergone the affliction of imprisonment, on the very first day of his reign had all the prisoners liberated, and appointed Malik Fakhr-u-d-Dīn Jūnā the Son of Ghāzī Malik, who eventually was entitled Muḥammad ‘Ādil, to be Mir Akhor.⁵

In the first year of his reign he contemplated the conquest of Deogīr otherwise called Daulatābād,⁶ but his Amīrs opposed and dissuaded him.

¹ So also the Tārīkh-i-Firoz Shāhī of Barnī, but Khusrū in both the ‘Ashīqa and Nuh Sipīhr, says the beginning of 716 H. In the latter poem the date is specifically stated to have been the 24th of Muḥarram, 716 H. But Firishṭa says the 7th of Muḥarram, and the editor states in a footnote to the translation of the Nuh Sipīhr, that in some loose extracts the date is 717 H.

‘Alāu-d-Dīn having died on the 7th Shawwāl 715 and Shihābu-d-Dīn having reigned three months and a few days, would bring the accession of Quṭbu-d-Dīn to about the middle or end of Muḥarram 716, so that we may consider this as the correct date unless there was an interregnum of a whole year, of which there is no evidence.

Verse.

It was not deemed expedient, from motives of wisdom,
That the world's king should move from his place;
Who knows, what are the hidden designs of evil wishers, 204.
Or who, in all sincerity, is well disposed to the king?

In the year 718 H. (1318 A.D.) Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn sent Sar Salāhi Kotwāl,¹ with orders to proceed to Gwālīār and put to death Khizr Khān and Shādi Khān. Having done this he summoned Dewal Rāni and included her in his ḥaram. With reference to this Mir Khusrū writes:

Verses.

In short one who is acquainted with the secret of this mystery
In this way opened the door of this treasury of secrets,
That when the Sultān Mubārak Shāh in cruelty Turned against his own kith and kin with anger and frowning,
He considered that the interests of the country demanded their murder,
And thought that they deserved the sharp sword.
His object was to empty the country of noble men by malicious enterprise.
Secretly he sent a messenger to Khizr Khān Making treacherous protestations of hearty good will Saying, Oh thou shining light who remainest far from the assembly,
Thy body ill at ease and thy countenance without light;
Thou knowest that this is none of my doing,
The oppressed remains while the oppressor disappears.
If thou art imprisoned, by the Lord of the world
When the time comes he himself will loosen these bonds.
In this matter haste and anxiety are not fitting,
An elephant extricates itself from the mire by patient endeavour.
Now, we too are engaged in plumbing this matter
So that by clever contrivance we may free you from that captivity.

205.

If thou art fitted to become a king
 We will make thee ruler over a wide kingdom.
 But the affection for some one which springs in thy heart
 Is not fitted for the loftiness of thy ambition.
 Dewal Rānī who is but a handmaiden to thee,
 For whom even were the moon needed as handmaid this were an easy matter,

I have heard that she is so dear to thee
 That thy cypress-like form stoops to kiss her feet.
 This is not fitting that from shortsightedness
 The king should be enslaved by a slave.
 The gourd is in any case of no account in the garden
 That it should attempt to raise its head in emulation of the Chinār.

A straw which places its foot upon the face of the stream
 Is carried hither and thither by the wind and buffeted by the floods.¹

[My heart's desire makes this request, that thou should'st give up that mistress of thine.]

Since she went from here, send her back hither again
 Send her to take her place at the foot of my throne.
 When the infatuation of thy mind is somewhat less
 We will send her back to thee to be thy handmaid.
 When the messenger went and took back the message
Khizr Khān's heart no longer enjoyed any rest.
 First he wept tears of blood which flooded his eyes and lips,
 Then he sent back an answer mingled with blood Saying, since the Shāh has attained his ambition in becoming a sovereign,

He must leave Dewal Rānī to me.

If however you desire to deprive me of this wealth
 You desire to see me despoiled of wealth and light.
 Since this heart's delight holds her head as high as mine
 Cut off my head, afterwards thou wilt know.
 When the messenger, from that grief-stricken soul

The false Christ or Antichrist who is to appear as one of the signs preceding the resurrection. Cf. 2 Thess. ii. So called according to some because he will cover the earth with his adherents like as the tar covers the body of the mangy camel, the word دجل dajjala in Arabic having the primary meaning of smearing with tar.

According to others he is so called because of his lying (secondary meaning of دجل) in arrogating to himself godship; or again from دجل dajjala in the twofold signification of "covering" (truth with falsehood) or "gilding," see Lane s. v.

Hideous enough to make Satan forgetful of his own ugliness;

 From every hair sprang a sword,²
 Fierce wrath as cutting as the executioner's sword,
 A glance as piercing as the chisel of Farhād;³
 His lips wreathed in an angry smile,
 Through wrath seizing his lips between his teeth
 His one desire and wish was revenge and punishment,
 From head to foot a statue of hatred and scorn;

207.

According to the Mishkāt, Dajjāl will be the second of the ten signs or tokens which are to precede the resurrection. After three of these signs have occurred, namely, the rising of the sun in the west, the coming of Dajjāl, and the appearance of the boast which is to emerge from the mountain of Safah, repentance will no longer avail anything.

The coming of Dajjāl is to be a time of calamity such as has never before been known. He is of low stature though bulky, with splay feet, blind, with the flesh even on one side of his face without the mark of an eye. His right eye is blind, like the seed of a grape, and the word kufr (infidelity), is written between his eyes, he is to appear from the middle of a road between Syria and 'Irāq and will mislead on the right hand and on the left. The repetition of the Chapter of the 'Cave' (Qur'ān XVIII) will be a means of repelling his wickedness. He will not be able to enter either Mecca or Medinah. His stay upon earth is to last forty days, one day equal to a year, and another day equal to a month, another day like a week and rest of the days like ordinary days. Dajjāl will it is said bestow great abundance upon those who believe in him, but sorely afflict those who reject him. He is to perform miracles such as killing a youth by severing him in two with a sword and restoring him to life. Then Jesus will descend from heaven and will destroy Dajjāl at the entrance to a village called Lud in Palestine. The Jews of Iṣfahān will follow Dajjāl before whose coming there will be three years during the first of which the sky will withhold one-third of its rain and the earth one-third of her productions, during the second the sky will withhold two-thirds and the earth two-thirds, during the third neither sky nor earth will yield rain nor produce, and every animal in the earth will die. He will then come forth upon a white ass, the space between the ears of which is seventy feet.

When he gave the signal and brandished his sword on all sides ¹
 Not one leapt like lightning from that mass of clouds.

May God have mercy !

How could anyone draw the sword of revenge upon that crowd of moonlike faces.

Whose heart would not be torn with distracting grief
 In pity for so many young and beautiful men ?

Oh Lord ! may the breast of heaven be rent a hundredfold
 To think that it has brought so many noble ones to the dust.
 How can you look for pity for the blood he sheds, in the heart of the butcher ?

Whose one desire is to see his knife stained with blood.
 When the bloody butcher binds roses upon his head,
 Why should he withhold his knife from the rose-like body ?
 Since no one of them desired that the sword should succeed in shedding their blood,²

There leapt from their midst like a whirlwind

A man of low origin, a Hindū by birth

Dusky of hue, like to Aluriman,³

Nay ! a thousand Ahrimans would stand aghast at his face

Grief-increasing like the pleasure of those in distress,

Wrong in judgment like the intellect of young people ;

Unlucky to look upon as a young owl,

Like a morning in Dai ⁴ at Ghaznī cold and inhospitable ;

Like the night of sorrow his forehead full of gloom,

Like the nature of a wicked man, accursed.

A cheek like the mouth of a man with paralysis ;

 Martyrdom was evident⁴ in Khizr in that palace ;
 Just as the tree praises God when its branches put forth leaves
 The heaven kept lamenting over his punishment ;
 The angels continually assisted him in his martyrdom,
 Rizwān threw open the gates of Paradise,
 All the Hūrīs began to sing his praises.
 From that martyr's shout of triumph which came forth from the Shāh,

The sun and moon joined in the martyr's song.
 When the dagger was raised aloft and the Shāh's face was seen amid its clustering locks,
 Lamentation arose in that assembly like⁵ the roll of thunder ;
 The sun made his body a shield to protect him,
 But Fate turned it on one side from before him.
 When the sword of Fate severs the cord of Hope,
 Neither sun nor moon can become a shield for thee ;
 With one blow which that ruthless one struck
 He made the Shāh's head a guest in his bosom.
 To wash away the blood, the revolving water-wheel of the sky
 Required that the spring of the sun should yield all its blood ;
 But, since there was no longer a breath of life in his body,
 Of what avail was it to wash the blood from the surface of it.
 Dewal Rānī, who was a woman of dignity and beauty,
 Was the lifspring of Khizr Khān's existence.

At all events, after the usurpation by Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn, all the rules and regulations made by 'Alāu-d-Dīn, each of which embodied some wise purpose or far-seeing design, were thrown into confusion, and dissoluteness and wickedness, contumacy and rebellion sprang anew to life during the reign of Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn, who threw open the doors of license and gratification of desires to the people ; and when Malik Kamālu-d-Dīn Garg, after that Alf Khān had been summoned to the presence and had been executed, proceeded to Gujrāt where he attained martyrdom, 'Ainu-l-Mulk Multānī was nominated by the Court,⁴ and having

In the year 718 H. (1318 A.D.) Sultān Quṭbu-d-Din marched for Deogīr with a larger army, and the Rāis of that country were not able to stand against him.

He flayed³ Harpāl Deo who had rebelled during the time which followed the death of Rām Deo.⁴ The country of the Marhattas also fell into the hands of Quṭbu-d-Din who, having given Khusrū Khān the canopy and staff of office ordered him to proceed to Ma'bar, and having left Yaklakhi in Deogīr as Nāib, returned to Dihli. Near Badra-i-Sakūn⁵ Malik Asadu-d-Din ibn Yaghrash Khān who was called Malik Khamūsh, and who was the uncle's son of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Din, was smitten with the ambition of chieftainship,⁶ and plotted a rebellion against the Sultān, who however was warned⁷ of this design by one of his loyal adherents, and gave orders for the immediate execution of Malik Asadu-d-Din. He also sent orders that twenty of the relations of Yaghrash Khān who were aware of this conspiracy⁸ some of whom were children, should be executed, and when he reached Jhāin he sent Shādi Kath⁹ his chief captain to Gwaliār to bring the family and relations of the murdered Khizr Khān and Shādi Khān with the remainder of the haram of 'Alāu-d-Din to Dihli, after having killed Sultān Shihābu-d-Dīn, which he carried out. Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn was led by the fact that Khizr Khān had been a disciple of the Sultānu-l-Mashāikh Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliya, to regard that holy Shaikh with suspicion and distrust, and in opposition to the wishes of the holy Shaikh, sent for Shaikh Ruknu-d-Dīn from Multān, and honoured Shaikhzada-i-Jām, who was one of the opponents of Shaikh (Nizāmu-d-Dīn) with special distinction.

This latter is moreover supported by the statement of Barnī. "They had no knowledge whatever of the conspiracy, but were all seized and slaughtered like sheep."

Verse.

When God¹ desires to openly disgrace any man
He leads him to abuse those of holy and pure nature;
And if God desires to hide the sins of any man
He leads him to talk little about the sins of other sinners.

His habits also underwent great change, and his heart emboldened him to walk in the valley of bloodshed as his father had done, so that rivers of blood began to flow, and he put to death without any cause Zafar Khān Wali of Gujerāt.

- In the mean while Yaklakhi had prepared a rebellion in Deogir, and had arranged to assume the insignia of royalty. At last when Khusrū Khān reached Deogir, the men of the army who had been sent to Deogir seized Yaklakhi and made him over to Khusrū Khān, who sent him bound to Dihli where he was executed. The Sultān² also put to death Malik Shāhin who was
211. known by the title of Wafā Malik, without any reason save the representations of some intriguers.

In these days the Sultān used generally to array himself in women's garments, and adorning himself like them with gold and jewels, used to give public audience. Moreover he openly indulged in drinking and other forms of vice, inter maren feminamque discrimen nullomodo facere solebat.

Husāmu-d-Dīn collected together the Barāwar² crew from all parts of that country and nursed a scheme of rebellion in his brain. The Amirs of Zafar Khān's party³ however seized him and sent him to Dihli. The Sultān led by the feelings he entertained towards Khusrū Khān took no steps to punish him, but had him set at liberty on the instant and gave him extraordinary privileges. Then he appointed Malik Wahīdu-d-Dīn⁴ Quraishī to Gujrāt in place of Husāmu-d-Dīn. He it was who was the Malik Talbiga Yaghda⁵ and Malik Talbiga Nāgori and Malik Hāji Nāib, with certain other Amīrs of the Sultān's party, becoming aware of his secret intentions threw him by force into a litter, and, marching with all haste by forced marches, conveyed him from Deogir to Dihli in seven days and acquainted the Sultān with his nefarious designs. Khusrū Khān however in the private apartment of the palace where he enjoyed the special companionship of the Sultān, gained him over by artful and specious representations, and fully persuaded the Sultān of the villainy of the Amīrs.⁶ The Sultān took his words as Gospel, so greatly was he influenced and controlled by him, and was incensed against the Amīrs, censured them⁷ severely and subjected them to many indignities, and although they brought forward many veracious witnesses in support of their allegations it was all of no use, and the wretched witnesses were severely punished.

The story of Farazdaq the poet fits in with this, namely when he accompanied by his wife, appealed to the Khalifah of Baghdād, he got Ja'far the Barmecide, to plead for him, and used his wife Zubeida Khātūn as an intermediary. Hārūn the Khalifah was

The printed text has simply لکھی but MS. (A) reads یکلکھی Yaklakhi. Yakalakhi it will be remembered, had been appointed Governor of Deogir after Harpāl Deo had been taken and put to death. According to Barnī, Yaklakhi was "an old servant of 'Alāu-d-Dīn, who for many years was nāib of the barids" (couriers). Yaklakhi now revolted and was arrested by Wahīdu-d-Dīn.

favourably disposed towards Zubaida, and passed orders in accordance with the petition of the wife of Farazdaq.¹ He accordingly wrote these lines :—

An advocate who appears before thee clothed
Is not like one who comes before thee naked.²

That is to say an intercessor who comes near thee wearing drawers will not be so influential as she who comes naked. From that day this became a proverbial saying among the Arabs.

As soon as Khusrū Khān became quite assured in all ways of his predominant influence over the Sultān, he gave orders for the assembly of all his tribe from Gujrāt and began to introduce them into the service of the Sultān. The Sultān reposed entire confidence both in him³ and in his family, and gave up the reins of Government absolutely into his hands,⁴ abandoning himself to rioting and debauchery.⁵

1 Abū Firās Hammām or Humaim the son of Ghālīb surnamed Abū Akhtal was a celebrated poet of the tribe of Tamīm. He was commonly known as Al-Farazdaq because of his stern and forbidding countenance. The meaning of Farazdaq is said to be a lump of dough which has been kneaded. (Freytag Hamasa II. 585). It was a nick-name given him according to Ibn Kutaiba on account of his ugly face. He further states however that he was so called on account of his short and dumpy stature which made him be compared to the crust (farazdaq) with which women polish their teeth. But the first explanation is best, because the poet caught the small-pox and when he recovered his face remained deformed and wrinkled (Ibn Khall: de Slane III. 623).

2 Read مستورا for منزرا which appears to be intended for منزرا. The occasion on which these lines were spoken was, according to Ibn Khalliqān, when Nawār the granddaughter of Dubeia, wished to marry one of the Quraish tribe, and asked Al-Farazdaq to act as her legal guardian because he was the son of her uncle. He however availed himself of a formal promise given by her to abide by his decision as to her affairs, to say he would marry her himself. Nawār was very angry at this and went to 'Abdollah ibn az-Zubair, sovereign of Hijāz and Irāq, to obtain redress. Al-Farazdaq set out also. They stopped at different houses. Al-Nawār stayed with al-Khāula wife of Abdollah ibn az-Zubair, and Al-Farazdaq with Hamza their son. Al-Khāula interceded for al-Nawār, and her intercession prevailed over that of Hamza whereupon Farazdaq spoke as above. (Ibn Khall: (de Slane), III. 624).

You must save yourself by saying, God save you Sir !

And the family of Barāwar¹ gained entire control of the Court of the Sultān, and used to assemble by day and by night at the house of Khusrū Khān to plot sedition and rebellion against the Sultān, and when Qāzī Zīāu-d-Dīn, who was known as Qāzī Khān, made these facts known, the Sultān who was the slave of his lust immediately summoned Khusrū Khān in private,² and informed him of what had been said, whereupon Khusrū Khān said, the people see the great kindness which the Sultān shews me and regard it as excessive, and from motives of jealousy falsely accuse me. The Sultān believed him and³ made over to him the keys of the royal treasury and of all the other store-houses as well : Khusrū Khān⁴ regarded this as a proof of his complete ascendancy deduced from it a favourable omen for his future :—

Verse

When he saw his affairs so prosperous
He considered that omen as a proof of victory;
From that favourable omen the heart of Khusrū Khān,
Like a strong mountain, became firmly established.

Eventually, one night the Sultān was holding a drinking party in the company of Khusrū Khān, and the Amirs of the guards withdrew from their posts. Qāzī Khān came down from the roof of the Hazār Sutūn palace and was engaged in examining if the doors were safe, and the guards posted.

talk on one way and another, till, taking him off his guard, they stabbed him and despatched him as a martyr to his abode in Paradise. There was a great uproar,² and the Sultān, who at that moment had no other companion than Khusrū Khān, enquired what was the tumult. Khusrū Khān rose from beside him and went out to instigate his followers to murder the Sultān, then returned and said that some of the horses of the stud had broken loose, and were fighting among themselves.
At this moment Jāhiriyyā the uncle of Khusrū Khān approached the Hazār Sūtūn with a party of his men, and having assassinated Ibrāhim and Ishāq who were on guard at the palace, made for the Sultān. The Sultān rising,³ half intoxicated as he was, ran towards the ḥaram, Khusrū Khān caught him from behind by the hair of his head, and as the Sultān was begging him to aid his escape Jāhiriyyā arrived, aimed a blow at the Sultān wounding him in the side, then with his sword cutting off the Sultān's head⁴ threw it down below from the roof of the palace.

At last having gained over Ghāzi Malik, he wrote a letter¹ expressing his sincerity of purpose, and desiring him when the day of battle should arrive to flee from Dihli to his own country, that is Mālwa, and return when the danger had passed.²

And of the Amirs, some sided with Khusrū Khān out of lust for place and property, but some others were rebellious, When Ghāzi Malik heard this startling news his zeal for Islām and for the preservation of the honour of his benefactor was stirred, so that he girded up his loins for vengeance, and sending despatches to the Malik's of the various districts sought their aid in extirpating the ungrateful wretch. Malik Fakhr-d-Din sent secretly a letter to his father conveying his intention to fly from Dihli and asking for post horses,³ which in the Hindi tongue, are called qāl chaulkī, and for the posting of cavalry escorts at several places along the route.

And Ghāzī Malik himself previously to this had sent two hundred cavalry into the fort of Sarsuti. When Khusrū Khān awoke from his slumber of neglect he recognized that the departure of Malik Fakhrū-d-Dīn Jūnā was a strong proof of the decline of his own power :¹ accordingly he despatched the son of Qurra Qumār, whom he had appointed 'Ariz-i-Mamālik,² in pursuit of him. He proceeded as far as the town of Sarsuti, but on his arrival there was obliged to retrace his steps without finding an opportunity of accomplishing his object, and conveyed to Khusrū Khān tidings regarding the real state of affairs.

Ghāzī Malik, after the arrival of his son, was demonstrative³ in his expressions of satisfaction, and gave effect to the aspirations of the Maliks ; further by issuing orders for the commencement of the *jihād*⁴ he made amends for the previous delay, and gave full satisfaction to the demands of bravery by marching in the direction of Dihli.

Khusrū Khān having bestowed upon his brother Khān-i-Khānān the canopy and staff of office, despatched Sūfi Khān with the other Amīrs of this canaille against Ghāzī Malik who for many years had done yeoman's service in the various wars with the Mughals, and had everywhere returned victorious and triumphant. But on the other hand Malik Bahrām Iba, the Governor of Multān and Uchh, arrived to reinforce Ghāzī Malik. Ghāzi Malik with all speed pursued and scattered these ungrateful wretches¹ and reached Dihli in one long march.² Khusrū Khān having rallied his scattered and panic stricken forces, opened the doors of the treasury and gave his army three and four years' pay together with large rewards and promises of appointments and governorships; and things being as they were, he brought out from confinement in the haram the remainder of the princes of the family of 'Alāu-d-Dīn whom he had blinded, and put them to death; then, led by hostile Fate, he marched on from the city in great force and proceeded to the Ḥauz-i-Khāss³ where he encamped, his camp extending in one line of tents from the Ḥauz-i-Khāss to Indrapath,⁴ while Ghāzi Malik encamped in the vicinity of the tomb⁵ of Sultān Razziya. On the following day the array of battle was drawn up and the followers of the truth engaged in close conflict with the partisans of infidelity, and utterly vanquished the impious horde.

We should not lose sight of the fact that from having built a palace such as this, which was quite unnecessary, there is a suspicion that Ulugh Khān may have built the palace⁴ without foundations¹ as was currently rumoured, but the author of the Tārikh-i-Fīroz Shāhī makes no mention of this although this may possibly be due to a desire to flatter Fīroz Shāh and out of regard for him.

² The text has بغیر دست نشستن but MS. (A) reads شستن the latter is correct. MS. (A) also omits the words ازان خانه (line 2 of the printed text).

This event took place in the year 725 A.H. (1325 A.D.) and the duration of the reign of Sultān Ghiyāṣu-d-Dīn Tughlaq Shāh was four years and some months.

Verse.

If thou placest the world beneath thy feet
Thou wilt not sleep at last in thine own place.

It is currently reported among the people of India that Sultān Ghiyāṣu-d-Dīn Tughlaq, on account of the ill will he bore to Sultānu-l-Mashāikh, sent a message to the Shaikh while on the way to Lakhnauti to this effect, "After my arrival at Dihli, either the Shaikh will be (ruler) there or I."² The Shaikh replied, "Dihli is still some way off."³ This saying became proverbial from that day and gained currency.

The Tughlaq Nāma of Mir Khusrū which was the latest of his works, was written in verse in honour of the Sultān and in obedience to his order.

The death of the Sultānu-l-Mashāikh and also of Mir Khusrū occurred in the same year as has already been stated.

SULTĀN MUHAMMAD 'ĀDIL IBN TUGHLAQ SHĀH.

¹ مخوف literally means "hollow" but in its grammatical sense implies weakness due to want of proper support. cf. فعل اجوف "hollow" verb: a verb of which the middle letter is weak.

² In accordance with the proverb دو درویش در گلیبی نخسپند dū darvīsh dar gilīme nakhspand. Two dervishes cannot sleep in one blanket; or again the proverb دو شمشیر در یک نیام ننگنجد dū shamshīr dar yak nīām nangunjad. Two swords will not go into one scabbard; as we say: There cannot be two kings in Brentford.

(1325 A.D.),¹ and after performing the ceremonial mourning for the space of forty days,² went to the treasure house of the kings of former ages, and gave largesse such as exceeds all bounds of description, and having distributed appointments and offices among the Amirs, he made Malik Firoz his uncle's son (who is the same person as Sultān Firoz) Nāibu-l-Mulk, and advanced the dignity of his near relations in the same manner. Hamīd Lawīkī, too, was raised to an exalted position and Malik Sartez obtained the title of Imādu-l-Mulk, Malik Khurram that of Zahīru-l-Juyūsh (Inspector of the Forces) Malik Pindār Khilji was given the title of Qadr Khān, and Malik Izzu-d-Din Yahyā that of A'zamul-Mulk, the district of Satgānw being also confirmed to him.

And in the year 727 A.H. (1326-1327 A.D.) the Sultān having formed the design of proceeding to Deogīr, posted a chain of dhāwa,³ that is to say pāiks, or runners, as guards at distances of one kroh along the whole road⁴ from Dihli to Deogīr, built a palace and a monastery at each stage and appointed⁵ a Shaikh to each. They used to keep in constant readiness food and drink, betel-leaf⁶ and all provisions for hospitality; and in ² The period here mentioned of forty days is the same as that enjoined in olden times to the Israelites: thus we find in Genesis I. 8, speaking of the death of Jacob "the physicians embalmed Israel and forty days were fulfilled for him; for so are fulfilled the days of these which are embalmed; and the Egyptians mourned for him three score and ten days. But in Numbers xx. 29, we find that the congregation mourned for Aaron thirty days.

The period of three days only is enjoined on Muḥammadans, except in the case of widows who must perform the special ceremony of mourning called Ihdād for four months and ten days. Among Hindūs the period of mourning is thirty days. (See Matthew, Mishkātu-l-Maṣābiḥ I. 389).

He gave Deogir the name of Daulatābād² and considering it as the centre of his dominions³ made it the metropolis, and conveyed Makhdūma-i-Jahān his mother, with all his family and relations, the Amirs and Malikis, the notables of the city, his servants and dependents, and all his treasure to Daulatābād: all the Saiyyids and Shaikhhs and 'Ulamā⁴ also proceeded thither in the following of Makhdūma-i-Jahān, and the stipends and emoluments of all of them were doubled, but in accordance with the saying "Exile is the gravest of all calamities and banishment is the sorest of all afflictions" this desolation of Dihli and its desertion was a source of great dis-into the form of a cone and skewered with a small piece of wood and offered for sale. In this condition they are known as khilli, کھیلی birā بیرا or gilauri گلوری. The distribution of this pān پان or betel, forms an important part on all ceremonial occasions, generally as a final act of hospitality before the guests depart. To European palates the birā is anything but pleasant, it has a pungent somewhat acrid taste. It is a powerful sinagogue.

The medicinal virtues of the Chavica betle are supposed to be great. The leaves smeared with mustard oil and applied hot to the chest in several layers are used as poultices in pulmonary catarrhs, or in painful affections of the liver. They are said also to arrest the secretion of milk when applied to the breasts. A form of cancer known as "betle-chewer's cancer" has been described by Dr. Elliott of Colombo.

The plant is said to be a native of Java whence it has been introduced. It grows best in a hot moist climate such as that of Lower Bengal where it is largely cultivated. (Drury, Useful Plants of India).

⁴ The word Saiyyid (سید) is a term used to denote the descendants of Muḥammad from his daughter Fāṭima by 'Alī. The Sultān of Zanzibār also adopts this as his regal title.

Shaikh (شیخ) is a term of honour denoting some considerable reputation in the religious world: a doctor of religion and law, a head or chief of some religious order, a chief of a tribe: or a reputed saint.

The two first Khalifas Abū Bakr and 'Umar are known as الشیخان. Ash-Shaikhhan. The two Shaikhhs.

The term 'Ulamā (علما) includes all religious teachers as Imāms, Muftis, Qāzis, Maulavis, (see Hughes Dictionary of Islam, also D'Herbelot.)

comfort to the inhabitants, large numbers of the feeble and widows, the helpless and indigent perished by the way, while even those who arrived in safety, could not settle there; and towards the end of the above-mentioned year Malik Bahādur Gurshasp the Inspector-General of the Forces, raised a rebellion in Dihli,¹ and Malik Aiyāz, who held the title of Khawāja-i-Jahān, fought with Bahādur and defeated him. Bahādur was taken prisoner and brought before the Sultān and met his punishment. After that, Malik Bahram Iba the adopted brother of Sultān Tughlaq raised a rebellion in Multān,² and put to death 'Ali Khata'i who had been sent from Dihli to summon him thither. The Sultān, in order to put down this rebellion, left Daulatābād for Dihli and thence by uninterrupted marches reached Multān. Balirām having come out³ against him fought with him, but was defeated and eventually put to death, his head was brought to the Sultān who intended to set the blood of the Multānis flowing like rivers on account of his crime, but when the Shaikh-ul-Islām Qutbu-l-'Alam Shaikh Ruknu-l-Haqq wau-d-Din Quraishi,⁴ may God sanctify his holy resting place, having bared his venerable head presented himself at the Court of the Sultān and made intercession, the Sultān pardoned the offences of the people.

1 Barni makes no mention of this occurrence. Firishta gives an account of it, but calls the rebel Bahāu-d-dīn and states that he was governor of Sāgur. The year assigned by him to this revolt in which Bahāu-d-dīn Gurshasp was defeated is 739 A.H. twelve years later than Badāoni's date, according to Briggs (I. 418). A reference to the original text, however, shews that the date given by Firishta is the same as Badāoni's date. Firishta Bo. Text I. 241.

And in the year 729 A.H. (1329 A.D.) Narma Shīrīn the Maghul,³ the brother of Qutluḡh Khwāja the Mughul King of Khurāsān who had formerly invaded Hindūstān, having entered the Dihli territory⁴ with an enormous army, reduced the majority of the forts, and proceeded slaughtering and taking captives from Lāhor and Sāmāna and Indarī to the borders of Badāon; and when the victorious troops of Islām came up with him, he retreated as they advanced; the Sultān pursued him⁵ as far as the frontier of Kalānor and defeated him, and leaving the destruction of that fort in the hands of Mujir-u-Dīn Abūrijā returned in the direction of Dihli. At this time the Sultān formed the opinion that in consequence of the refractory conduct of his subjects in the Doēb it was advisable to double the taxes levied on that country; he also instituted numbering their cattle and a house census, and other vexatious and oppressive measures, which were the cause of the complete ruin and desolation of the country,⁶ the weak were utterly destroyed and the strong laid the foundations of rebellion. The Sultān gave orders for the remainder of the inhabitants of Dihli and the adjoining towns to start for Daulatābād, caravan by caravan, the houses were to be purchased from their owners, and the price of them to be paid in cash out of the public treasury, in addition to which large rewards were to be offered. By these means Daulatābād was populated, and Dihli

229. This state of affairs also led to a diminution of the public funds. Among other sources of loss to the treasury was this that the Sultān enacted that the *muhār*¹ of copper should become current on an equal footing with the muhār of silver, and any one who shewed reluctance to receive it used to be instantly punished severely. This enactment led to many corrupt practices in the kingdom as a matter of course, and unscrupulous and contumacious rascals used everywhere in their own houses to set up mints and stamp coins,² and taking them into the cities used to purchase with them silver and horses, weapons and fine things, and thus rose to great wealth and dignity. But inasmuch as copper had no value as a currency in places at a distance and one tanka of gold rose to the value of fifty or sixty copper coins, the Sultān perceived the worthlessness of the copper coinage, and issued an edict to the effect that every one who had in his house a copper tanka should, if he brought them to the public treasury, receive for them golden tankas in equal value.³ The people

² MS. (A) omits the word مس but it seems probable that this illicit coining was mainly confined to copper. Barnī states that the Hindūs of every province coined krors and laks of copper coins, so also Firsihta.

³ The Persiān text is: تنكهای زر برابر آن ببرد. This can hardly mean that for every copper tanka a golden tanka would be given, and yet the wording of the preceding line gives colour to this view. It runs as follows هر کس در خانه باشد "Every one who has in his house a copper tanka." Barnī's account is much the same, Firsihta's is more explicit, but it is not clear whether the coins were exchanged at their relative metal value or their face value. It however is most probable that the copper tanka having profited grēntly by this arrangement, till at last copper became copper and silver silver, and those copper tankas were lying in heaps in Tughlaqābād as late as the time of Sulṭān Mubārak Shāh according to the author of the Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhi, and had no more value than stones. God knows the truth.

And in the year¹ 738 A.H. (1337 A.D.) he despatched a force of eighty thousand² cavalry under eminent commanders to capture the mountain of Himāchal³ which stands between the country of Chin and Hindustān, and which they also call Qarāchal⁴ with orders to leave garrisons in each successive place so that the line of communications for transport and supplies might remain open and the road of return might be easy. After the entry of this army into this country, by reason of the peculiar features of that mountain, on which heavy clouds form and rain pours in torrents at the sound of men's voices and their shouts and the neighing of horses, in consequence also of the narrowness of the been artificially pronounced equal in value to the silver tanka, was repurchased by the treasury at that same value, so that the dislocation of the currency and its consequent disasters are easily intelligible. See Elliott III. 240, Briggs's Firishṭa I. 415.

Although Briggs's translation leaves us in doubt as to this, the text of Firishṭa is perfectly clear on the subject: and we see that these copper tankas were issued as tokens with an artificial value, and it was when the Sulṭān found that the copper currency was distrusted by his people who found it was not received in foreign countries, that he hit upon the expedient of offering to exchange the copper tankas for silver or gold tankas, hoping thereby, as Firishṭa says, to rehabilitate the copper tanka, but the people were too wise for this, and threw the whole stock genuine and counterfeit alike upon the Treasury which was thus drained of gold and silver. Firishṭa (Bo. Ed. p. 239).

For a full account of this forced currency See Thomas Pathān Kings pp. 239, et seqq.

³ Himāchal. Snowy mountain. The Calcutta Text of Barnī calls this mountain فرجال misprint probably for قراجال p. 477, line 16, &c.

⁴ Rashīd-u-d-Dīn: the Jāmi'u-l-Tawārikh (Elliott, I. 46) states "Besides these mountains there are others called Kalārchal (called also by the same author in another passage hārjal). The editor notes "The mountains of Sirinor." Reinaud reads the name "Kelardjek." Ibn Batūta calls them "Kaiāchil" (Vol. III. 325). The latter part of the name is probably the Sanskrit śchal mountain. The first part may be the Turki word قرا signifying black; from the intense cold of such a snowy range.

paths and the scarcity of fodder, the patrols were not able to stand to their posts, and the hill tribes getting the upper hand drove back the army, and falling upon the rear of the force killed many of them with poisoned arrows and stone showers, and sending the most of them to the eternal world enabled them to attain martyrdom, taking the rest prisoners.¹ For a long time they wandered helplessly among the mountains, and those who escaped after countless hardships the Sultān visited with condign punishment.² And after this calamity so great an army never gathered round the Sultān and all that money expended in their pay was thrown away.

And in the year 739 A.H. (1338 A.D.) Bahrām Khān Governor of Sunargāw died, and Malik Fakhr-d-Din Silāhdār became rebellious and assumed the title of Sultān, and having fought with Qadr Khān the ruler of Lakhnautī in conjunction with Malik Husamu-d-Din Abūrijā the Mustaufi, and 'Izzu-d-Din Yahyā A'zamu-l-Mulk, was defeated, and all his sources of grandeur, his treasure and his retainers fell into the hands of Qadr Khān; and when the rainy season had arrived the horses belonging to Qadr Khān died, and he had collected much money³ and had stored it up in heaps in his own house with the object of presenting it to the Sultān. In spite of all that Husāmu-d-Din Aburjā could do to dissuade him from amassing wealth and inducing men to covet it and thus leading to disorder, Qadr Khān would not listen, till eventually the very result predicted by Husamu-d-Din ensued; Malik Fakhr-d-Din returned, and the soldiery of Husāmu-d-Din joined him and killed their own master, and all the more fell to the lot of Fakhr-d-Din. The absolute control of Sunargāw was given him; he appointed one Mukhlis a servant of his, to Lakhnautī, and 'Alī Mubārak Inspector of Troops; Qadr Khān put Mukhlis to death and aspired at independence, writing diplomatic letters to the court of the Sultān. The Sultān appointed Malik Yūsuf, but he died by the way, and the Sultān, having other affairs to attend to, omitted to send any one else to that district.⁴

¹ Barnī states that the Hindūs of Qarājā seized the passes behind the advancing force, and that of all the force only ten sowars returned. (p. 478). See also Elliott, III. 242.

² According to Firishṭa all those who escaped were put to death by order of the Sultān.

At this juncture 'Ali Mubarak by reason of the enmity he bore to Fakhr-d-Din, displayed the insignia of royalty, and assumed the title of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Din, and Malik Ilyās Hāji who was a man of family and retinue, after a few days put 'Alāu-d-Din to death with the assistance of some of the Amirs and Malikis of Lakhnauti, and himself assumed the title of Sultān Shamsu-d-Din. 231.

And in the year 741 A.H. (1340 A.D.) Sultān Muḥammad having left with the object of reducing Sunārgānw, seized Fakhr-d-Din and brought him prisoner to Lakhnauti, where he put him to death and returned. Shamsu-d-Din became absolute monarch of that region, and the kingly power and authority over that country descended for a lengthened period in the hands of his sons,¹ and never again returned to the possession of Sultān Muḥammad 'Ādil.

And in the year 742 A.H. (1341 A.D.) Saiyyid Ḥasan Kaithali the father of Malik Ibrāhim a fefee of the Sultān, who was generally known as Ḥasan Kāngū, and who eventually obtained the sovereignty of the Deccan with the title of 'Alāu-d-Din Bahman Shāh, fermented a revolt in Ma'bar on the grounds of the severity of the Sultān's governors, and the innovations introduced in the laws, and the number of executions,² and gained over to his own party nearly all the great men of Dihli who had been appointed to that district. He put to death the leaders of the opposite party. The Sultān proceeded from Lakhnauti to Deogir for the purpose of quelling that disturbance, and on his arrival at Tilang was taken ill, and was forced to return by uninterrupted marches to Dihli. He left Qutlugh Khān in Daulatābād; thus the rebellion in Ma'bar remained unchecked and Ḥasan's influence increased rapidly.

And in the year 743 (1342 A.D.) they put to death by treachery Malik Halājun and Kul Chander Khākhar and Malik Tātār Khurd, the Governor of Lāhore,³ and when Khwāja-i-Jahān came up against them,⁴ they came out to do battle with him, but the scoundrels suffered a severe defeat and were sorely punished.

And in the year 744 A.H. (1343 A.D.) the Sultān passing through Sanām and Sāmāna gave orders to the Saiyyids and all the Muslims in opposition to the advice of Ḥasan Kānkū, for a general massacre, but he kept the chief men of those districts in their posts, conveyed them to the suburbs of the city, and conferred upon them villages and districts, and bestowing many rich robes of honour, and purses of gold gave them a place of abode there; and when a general famine arose he issued an edict that any one who wished should proceed to the eastern part of Hindustān and spend the days of dearth and scarcity there, without let or hindrance, and in the same way if any person wishing to give up living in Daulatābād should return to Dihli, no one would molest him. Moreover in that year so many people arrived in Hindustān from the countries of Khurasān and Irāq and Samarqand, in the hope of receiving the bounty of the Sultān, that hardly any other races were to be seen in that country.

And in this year Hājī Sa'id Saṣṣari¹ arrived from Egypt bearing the diploma of the Khalifah² with a banner and a robe of honour, conferring upon the Sultān the title of Nāṣir-i-Amīr-i-Mū'minīn from the Khalifah of the Abbāsides who were still extant. The Sultān ordered decorations and illuminations in the city, and proceeded with all the Shaikhs and Saiyyids and his retainers to give him an honourable reception, then, dismounting, he kissed the feet of Hājī Sa'id and joined his retinue. He then re-established the Friday prayers and the 'Id, which all this time he had kept in abeyance waiting for the orders and sanction of the Khalifah, he read the Khubbah in the name of the Khalifah, and struck out the names of those kings who had not received authority from the Dār-ul-Khilāfah, with the exception of Sultān Maḥmūd. He then gave largesse³ of money and valuables to such an extent that his treasury became exhausted, he also despatched to Egypt a precious jewel, the like of which he had not in his treasury, by the hands of Hāji Barq'ai, with other rarities and presents; and having become, in his own opinion, the rightful Khalifah, and keeping constantly placed before him the Qur'ān¹ and the honorary presents and the patent of the Khalifah, would issue commands as though he were the Khalifah, and used to say "The Khalifah says" this or that. He compelled the people to profess allegiance to the Khalifah, and went to Sarkdawā'i which is in the vicinity of Shamsābād, and on two or three occasions² in Barūj and Kaubhāyat also³ he received patents from the Khalifah, and a second time the Makhdūmzāda-i-Baghdādī⁴ came to visit him, and the Sultān went on foot to Pālam to receive him; and when he saw him from afar off he advanced to meet him, and seated him upon the throne beside himself and made over to him without reservation, the city of Kili⁵ with the garden and the palace and all the buildings.

And in the year 745 A. H. (1344 A. D.) Malik Nizāmu-l-Mulk governor of Karra, raised a rebellion, Shahr-n-llah the brother of 'Ainu-l-Mulk brought up an army against him from Oudh and took him prisoner, but the rebellion was quelled. Then Shihābu-d-din Sultān waxed riotous in Bidar, and Qutlugh Khān was despatched against him, and Shihābu-d-din coming out with his son to do battle was besieged in the fortress, and Qutlugh Khān inducing him to come out by promises of quarter, sent him to the royal presence.

fought with Qutlugh Khān, but was defeated and obliged to retreat to the fortress of Bidar where he shut himself up. Qutlugh Khān however took him also prisoner, and sent him to Sarkdawāri which was the camp of the Sultān's army. The Sultān in the first instance sent the captives to Ghazni in exile, but afterwards recalled them thence and put them all to death.

234. And in the year 747 A.H. (1346 A.D.) at the time when the Sultān had made Sarkdawāri his camp, 'Ainu-l-Mulk arrived at the Court, bringing from Zafarābād and Oudh much property and rarities of great value as presents; then the Sultān came to the conclusion that it was advisable to recall Qutlugh Khān from the Dakkan, and send 'Ainu-l-Mulk to replace him. 'Ainu-l-Mulk got some idea into his head, and fled by night from Sarkdawāri and crossing the river Ganges made for Oudh, and his brother Shahrullāh laid hands upon certain of the elephants and horses¹ belonging to the king, which had been left behind to graze, and carried them off. The Sultān went in pursuit of them as far as Qanauj, and 'Ainu-l-Mulk, at the instigation of his brothers and a party of the followers of Malik Firoz Nāib Barbak, who had been placed in charge of the elephants and horses, crossed the river Ganges and coming over to this side² attacked the army of the Sultān, and like the thieves and Gawārs (of India)³ took to the woods and fought on foot, but not being able to stand against the elephants and archers of the king took to flight,⁴ and Shahrullāh and his other brother together with the majority of the sirdārs of 'Ainu-l-Mulk were drowned, and the remainder fell by the swords of the soldiers, and the fugitives were taken prisoners by the Gawārs, who having found 'Ainu-l-Mulk alive took him on their shoulders⁵ and brought him bareheaded⁶ to the court and gave him a few days respite,⁷ and the Sultān in consideration of his excellent services gave him his freedom, and in accordance with his former custom treated him well, and giving him a district sent him back to Dihli; then he recalled Qutluḡ Khān from the Dakkan, but inasmuch as Qutluḡ Khān had reduced that country to excellent order and had gained the good will of the people, his recall was the cause of great discontent (and disaffection)¹ and 'Azīz Khūmār² who was one of the canaille, proceeding to Mālwa put to death many centurions (or Amirs of a hundred) which is the meaning of the word Yūzbāshī³ in accordance with the Sultān's orders, and thence arose many insurrections.

And in the year 748 A.H. (1347 A.D.) the captains of hundreds, stirred up rebellion and sedition in Gujrāt against Muqbil the servant of Khwāja-i-Jahān who was nāib-vazīr of Gujrāt, and was bringing treasure to the Court, and attacked him by night, getting possession of the treasure and horses and property belonging to the king. The Sultān arrived at Gujrāt with the object of quelling this rebellion, and sent some of the trustworthy Amirs as for instance Malik 'Alī Sarjāndār, and Aḥmad Lāchin to Daulatābād to bind the Amirs of hundreds who were there and bring them to Court. As soon as Malik Aḥmad Lāchin arrived at the pass of Manikganj, the Amirs of hundreds in their alarm⁴ came to a common understanding, and put Mālik Aḥmad Lāchin to death; Azīz Khūmār who had gone from Gujrāt to oppose the Amirs of hundreds of Dabhoi⁵ and Baroda, on coming face to face with the insurgents lost his head,⁶ fell from his horse and was taken prisoner. This news had reached the Sultān and had augmented his wrath considerably. And after the defeat of Muqbil and the murder of 'Azīz, the Amirs of hundreds waxed bold, and sent for their families and relations from all directions, and with one consent turned against the Sultān⁷ and having captured the fortress of Daulatābād from the the governors of Malik 'Alam took possession of it, and raising to the throne one Isma'il Fath gave him the title of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn. After this the Amīrs of hundreds of Dabho'i and Baroda over whom the Sultān had appointed other Amīrs, being defeated by the army opposed to them joined hands with the Amīrs of hundreds of Daulatābād. When the Sultān went to Daulatābād Isma'il Fath prepared to give him battle, but being defeated shut himself up in the fortress of Dhārānagar by which is meant the citadel¹ of Daulatābād; many Muslims of Daulatābād were slain in this rebellion, or were made prisoners, and Malik² 'Imādu-l-Mulk Sartez was ordered to pursue³ the fugitive Amīrs of hundreds towards Bīdar. In the meantime tidings arrived of the rebellion in Gujrāt of Malik Taghī, who, having put to death Malik Muẓaffar the governor of that place, had obtained possession⁴ of a large number of horses and much property. Thereupon the Sultān leaving in Dhārānagar Malik Janhar and Khudāwandzāda Qiwāmu-d-Dīn and Shaikh Burhānu-d-Dīn Balārāmi⁵ left to quell the rebellion of Taghī;⁶ the army which had fled from Daulatābād under the leadership of Ḥasan Kāngū, coming out of hiding attacked⁷ 'Imādu-l-Mulk Sartez. 'Imādu-l-Mulk was slain, and his army fled to Daulatābād and sought shelter there, and Malik Janhar with Khudāwandzāda Qiwāmu-d-Dīn and the other Amīrs not being able to withstand Ḥasan in Daulatābād evacuated those districts and made for Dhārānagar. Ḥasan Kāngū pursued them and came to Daulatābād,⁸ and having driven out Isma'il Fath assumed the title of 'Alāu-d-Dīn and usurped the government, and from that time forward the rule of the districts of Daulatābād and the sovereignty of that kingdom remained in his family. the rebel, after the arrival of the Sultān at Gujrāt, ventured a second time to fight with him and was again defeated, and giving himself up to brigandage roamed about from place to place, the Sultān however continued to pursue him and followed him wherever he went. And in this expedition the Sultān having sent for Malik Firoz from Dihli attached him to his Court; and ¹ in this year Malik Gīr the son of Malik Qabūl Khālifatī, to whom the Sultān had delegated the control of all his important affairs, and on whose behalf he had written a letter expressing submission to the Egyptian Khālīfah, and had sent it by the hand of Hājī Barqa'i, died, and Aḥmad Aiyāz, who is also called Khwāja-i Jahān, and Malik Qabūl Qiwāmu-l-Mulk were carrying on the government in Dihli. Towards the end of the reign of Muḥammad, disaffection and rebellion, mischief and sedition became increased day by day,² so that if he turned his attention to curing one evil, another was not wanting to supply its place,³ and matters were past all remedy,⁴ and the glory⁵ of the kingdom, and prosperity⁶ of the country was entirely subverted. Tyranny supplanted equity, and infidelity flourished in place of Islām. There were many reasons for this, which by their co-operation led to ruin and dissension, and the decline of the kingdom. These causes are given in detail in the original history⁷ the Firozshāhī, and also in the Mubārakshāhī. The results are here given in brief arranged under seven heads. Firstly.—The greater part of the people and inhabitants of the towns and districts were

This would distinguish the Tārīkh-i-Firoz Shāhī of Barnī as the original history of that name. The Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī is that of Yahyā ibn Aḥmad. (See Elliott, IV., pp. 6 and seqq).

It should be remembered that this statement has been copied as it stands from the Mubārakshāhī, but I cannot say whether the author of that work has been guilty of exaggeration or if in reality the facts were as stated.⁶ Fourthly.—the desertion of Dihli, and the population of Daulatābād, because after Dihli was laid waste they brought people from the towns and other places into that city and populated it, and then again removed them thence to Daulatābād, so that all their hereditary estates and family holdings, and all the property and effects⁷ they possessed were wasted and dissipated, so that they never saw anything more of them. Fifthly.—The massacre of the eighty thousand cavalry in a body in the hills of Himāchal, and the consequent desolation of their families. Sixthly.—The daily occurrence of rebellion and mutiny in every place where people were in dread of their lives, some of them fell in battle but the greater number were put to death with their families upon false charges, so that in every way that wretched country was being ruined. Seventhly.—The blood thirsti-ness of the Sultān, and his system of Government of his people, which made Saiyyids, 'Ulamā, Shaikhs, ragamuffins and scoundrels, artisans,¹ peasants,² and soldiers, all alike in his eyes. Moreover there was constantly in front of his royal pavilion and his Civil Court a mound of dead bodies and a heap of corpses, while the sweepers and executioners were wearied out with their work of dragging (the wretched victims) and putting them to death in crowds. So that³ the people were never tired of rebelling nor the king of punishing (the rebels).⁴ At last the Sultān was at his wit's end what to do, but for all this he did not keep his foot out of the stirrup, nor did his sword rest from punishment, but all to no purpose, till the flood of sedition waxed violent, and the nobles of the kingdom by degrees grew⁵ feeble, at length disease overcame him, and the Sultān was freed from his people and the people from their Sultān.

They relate an extraordinary story of one of the irregular acts of the Sultān which was that he kept such strict watch over all matters involving punishment; that he used to keep four Muftis⁶ to whom he allotted quarters in the precincts of his own palace, and used to see that they kept to their appointed places,⁷ so that when anyone who was arrested upon any charge, he might in the first place argue with the Muftis about his due punishment, so far as he was able,¹ and had said, Be very careful that you do not fail in the slightest degree by defect in speaking that which you consider right, because if any one should be put to death wrongfully and the oversight should have been on your side, the blood of that man will be upon your head. Then if after long discussion they convicted (the prisoner), even though it were midnight² he would pass orders for his execution,³ and if he himself found for conviction⁴ he would refer it to another meeting, and would endeavour to find a means of upsetting their arguments,⁵ and would come and make a speech, and when the Muftis were at a loss for a further argument, he would put (the prisoner) to death on the instant or else release him on the spot.

They say⁶ that one day Sultān⁷ Muḥammad wearing his shoes went on foot into the Court of Justice⁸ of Qāzī Kamālu-d-Dīn Ṣadr-i-Jahān and said, The Shaiḫzāda-i-Jāmi has called me a tyrant, send for him that he may substantiate his charge of tyranny against me, or, if he fails, that you may pronounce⁹ against him the sentence of such punishment according to law as the case may require. When the Shaiḫzāda was summoned he confessed (to having said it) and the Sultān enquired (what his grounds were). He replied, every one whom you punish (with death) lawfully or unlawfully, that is your prerogative, but that you should hand over his wife and children to the executioners as you do, to do what they will with them, in what religion and under what sacred law do you find this? The Sultān was silent and rose up from the Court,¹⁰ and ordered that the Shaiḫzāda should be bound; this order was carried out and he was put into an iron cage; then he had him carried in that very way on the journey to Daulatābād on the back of an elephant. When he returned and arrived at Dihli, he brought him before the same Court,¹¹ and bringing him out of the cage gave orders in obedience to which the poor wretch was cut in two in his presence. From this it is clear that the Sultān was a mixture of opposites, and¹² for this reason his name has been handed

There are many stories bearing upon this which I have heard, but to write or speak of them would lead me too far afield. So "Take example from it ye that are endowed with sight."¹ In short² after great havoc had been wrought in the affairs of the state by the excessive tyranny and oppression of the Sultān, which he however regarded as the essence of justice, and great breaches had been which the wise and learned were powerless to repair,³ by reason of his various toils and his evil designs, the disease of Phthisis⁴ found its way to his constitution; notwithstanding this he set himself to follow up Taghī, and in the

حمى دق هي ان يتشبت الحرارة الخارجة عن الطبع بالأعضاء الاصلية خصرها للقلب تفني وطويات البدن واقلل هي حرارة غريبة تحدث للبدن بواسطة حدو
ثها في اعضائه -

The fever called "Diqq" is when the heat which arises from the constitution seizes upon the chief essential organs, especially the heart, and the moisture of the body disappears. Another opinion is that this is an extraneous fever which attacks the body by means of its generation in some of its members.

The *Burhān-i-Qāṭi*¹ states that it is called دق because it emaciates the body.

Sadīdī's account is as follows. The fever حمى الدق is usually fatal,.....It is either simple or complicated with putrid fever. The signs of this complication are persistence of the fever, with an exacerbation on the day of the paroxysm of the putrid fever, shivering is also present. The worst complication of all is (he says) when "diqq" is complicated with one of the fevers which require treatment by purges, because the treatment of "diqq" is the opposite to this.

The pulse in uncomplicated "diqq" is hard, frequent, and slender.....The surface of the body is not very hot at the first feel, but after a few moments it feels scorching, hottest of all over the arteries, the heat increases especially in the face and upper parts of the body.

Food should be nourishing.....Some unskilful physicians withhold food and kill the patient speedily. Food should be moist and cooling. If the fever passes on to the degree called ذبول zabul the pulse increases in hardness and tenuity, the eyes change and become covered with sordes, the cartilages of all the bones are prominent, the temples sink in, the skin of the forehead tightens, the skin loses its lustre, and has a dusty appearance; the eyelids become heavy; all this is the result of rapid dissolution, and the abundance of dryness and disappearance of the natural moisture. There hope of exterminating him set out for the kingdom of Thatha where Taghi had fled for safety; and ² in that expedition Qarghan Nāib of the king of Khurāsān sent Altūn Bahādur with five thousand cavalry to assist the Sultān. The Sultān's illness was at that time slightly less urgent ³ and when he arrived at Thatha he fasted on the day of the 'Āshūra,⁴ which was in the very middle of the hot season, and after breaking his fast he ate some fish, whereupon his illness returned, and on the twenty-first of Muḥarram in the year 752 H. (1351 A.D.) he took his way to the next world,⁵ the duration of his reign having been twenty-seven years.

also appears in the urinary excretion, oiliness and a scaly deposit; the nose becomes sharp, the hair grows long, and lice are of frequent occurrence on the body because of the excessive amount of exhalation. The abdomen falls in till it touches the backbone, the skin of the chest is also retracted, and the nails become long (اچذ بت الاظفار) then the diarrhoea recurs, the hair falls out and death occurs.

It will be observed that there is no mention here of any of the lung symptoms of Phthisis, all that we have described is a continued fever of remittent type running a moderately long course as is shewn by the symptoms described. No mention is made of any eruption, nor is diarrhoea apparently more than an intercurrent symptom appearing late in the disease.

This was probably one of the fevers so common in India for which for want of a better name "typho-malarial" has been suggested.

Probably the complication of "diqq" with "putrid fever" of which Sadidi speaks was more comparable to the "enteric fever" of modern science. Sadidi speaks elsewhere of three degrees of severity of this fever. The first is called "diqq" the second more severe is called sabūl and the most severe of all is called "hashf."

I have only been able to epitomise Sadidi's account which will be found at pages 427-428 of his work. (Al Mughni fi Sharḥ il Mūjaz).

Some of the Muftis informed the Sultān of this, and his orders were that those two, master and disciple³ were to be taken in confinement from Dihli and brought to the camp. throne, and had given him the title of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Maḥmūd Shāh, appointing himself Vakil, after considerable argument,¹ and much correspondence, by reason of his helplessness and dejection, by the mediation of Ashraf-ul-Mulk and the other nobles and grandees, came with bared head, casting his turban on his neck, to the neighbourhood of Hānsi, and had an interview with the Sultān, who washed out the writing of his fault with the water of forgiveness, and made him over to the Kotwāl of Hānsi, and as for the party who had been his companions in this faction and opposition, he dispersed them all in different directions. At Sarsuti tidings arrived of the birth of Shāhzāda Faṭh Khān,² whose son eventually became Tughlaq Shāh, and the news of the death³ of Taghī Tāghī also reached him there from Gujrat; and on the second of Rajab in the aforesaid year, he graced the throne of Dihli by his accession and made a fresh distribution of appointments.

244. And in the year 753 H. (1352 A.D.) he went to the Sirmūr hills for the purpose of relaxation and sport, and returned thence, and in the month of Rajab of this year Shāhzāda Muḥammad Khān, who eventually obtained the title of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Muḥammad Shāh, was born.

And in the year 754 H. (1353 A.D.) he returned from Kalānōr whither he had gone on a hunting expedition, and built a lofty building on the banks of the river Sarsuti and [gave it to Shaiḫ Ṣadr-u-d-Dīn Multāni, may God sanctify his resting place, the Shaiḫ-u-l-Islām] and Malik Qubāl * Nāib Vazīr he made Khān-i-Jahān,⁴ and at the close of this year he went to Lakhnauti with the intention of putting down the rebellion of Ḥājī Ilyās who had assumed the title of Shamsu-d-Dīn. He accordingly took refuge in the fort of Ikḍāla,⁵ which is the strongest of the forts

³ Firozābād. This must not be confounded with the Firozābād which arose from the change of name of Panḍuah, see Elliott, III. 295, and Panḍuah, Imp. Gaz. Vol. XI.

This Firozābād (see J. A. S. B., 1870), was situated five kos (ten miles) from Dihli, and included according to Shams-i-Sirāj 'Afif, eighteen places, the gasba (townships) of Indarpat and others a list of which will be found in Elliott, III. 303. At page 298 will also be found an account of the founding of the city of Hissār (Hissār Firozāh) and of the construction of two canals leading to it one from the Sutlej and the other from the Jumna. The modern representation of the latter canal, which was called Rajīwa, is found in the Western Jumna Canal passing through Karnāl (see Hunter's Imp. Gaz., Vol. VII. 258 for an account of this canal). The canal leading from the Sutlej was called Alagh Khāni (Ulugh Khāni). In modern maps there is a trace of this canal, but it is called the Jureah canal, which is probably the word Rajīwa converted and applied in error to this canal. Rennell's map (Tieff. Vol. III) shews the supposed canal of Firoz Shāh, and it is evident from our author's statement that this canal was commenced not from the Hissār end but from Dipālpūr, which lay at the junction of the Biās and Sutlej on the banks of the Biās, and passed south-east near Fathabad, if not actually through it, to join the river Jahjar, which in Rennell's map is called the Jidjer, its nearest point measured from Dipālpūr being exactly 100 miles (forty-eight kroh) on this map, whereas the town of Jhajhar Lat. 28° 16' N. Long. 77° 42' 15" E. is 200 miles (Hunter's Imp. Gaz., Vol. VII. 195). (The river Jahjar flowed south-east through Fatehpūr joining the Jumna near Etawah). For this reason it appears likely that the canal was led not to Jhajhar but into the river Jahjar as above stated. (See Bo : Firishṭa, Text I. 263).

Shams-i-Sirāj 'Afif makes no mention of Dipālpūr in connection with any canal, and there is one difficulty in his account as he says that both the canals, the Rajīwah and Ulugh Khāni, were conducted through the vicinity of went to Dipālpūr and bringing a canal from the river Satlaj¹ led it as far as the Jahjar which is forty-eight kroh from there.

In the year 757 A.H. (1356 A.D.) he conducted a stream from the river Jamna from the vicinity of Mandūi (Mandili) and 245. Sarūr,² and having led seven other canals into it took it to Hānsī

Karnāl. If this was so the "supposed canal of Firoz Shāh" in Rennell's map cannot be the Ulugh Khānī. His words are as follows:—

دهانڈے این ہردو جوی از اتصال کرنال بیرون آوردہ میان ہشتاد کرورہ کروہ در شہر حصار فیروزہ بردہ -

Dahāna-i in har do jū az ittisāl i karnāl bīrān āwarda miyān i hashtād kroh kroh dar shahr i Hissār Firūza burda.

It is not to be supposed that Firoz Shāh would take his canal from Dipālpūr to Karuāl when his objective was Hissār; we have also Badāoni's clear statement that a canal was brought from the Sutlej and led as far as the Jahjar, this canal would coincide with the line of that shewn in Rennell's map, but not with that of Shams-i-Sirāj.

The canal mentioned in the next paragraph is evidently the one to which Shams-i-Sirāj 'Afif refers (Elliott, III. 209-300), although it is not very evident what the exact course of this canal was: I can find no trace of any places named Mandūi (Mandili) or Sarūr anywhere in the maps, while Rās mentioned here by Badāoni must be what 'Afif calls Great Larās, as he states that it was in the neighbourhood of Great Larās that Sulṭān Firoz built the city of Hissār Firoza. (Elliott, p. 299). Rennell (memoir p. 72, quoting from Dow I. 327 has Beraisen, which is a mistaken reading of bi Rāsain in the original, that is to say the two Rāses, Great Larās and Little Larās.

It would seem that there were in all three canals to Hissār Firoza, one from Dipālpūr to Hissār and on to the Jahjar, this was brought from the Sutlej. A second from the Jamna as far as Karnāl (Rajiwah). A third from the Sutlej as far as Karnāl (Ulugh Khānī). At Karnāl according to 'Afif's account these two last joined. The only way this can have been possible is by the courses of the Sutlej and Jamna being very different from their present courses or even from the beds of these rivers in 1732 when Rennell made his map.

By bringing the Sutlej further south-east near to the course of the Ghaggar say near to Thanesar, we should have a point from which we can understand that it would have been advantageous to bring water from both the Sutlej and Jamna vid Karnāl.

And in the year 759 H. (1358 A.D.) having gone to Samāna, he appointed Malik Qabūl *Sarbardadār*¹ to proceed against² the Mughuls who had arrived on the frontier of Dipālpūr. The Mughuls upon hearing particulars of the Sultān's army turned back and went to their own country, and the Sultān returned to Dihli;³ and in this year the Sultān despatched some Arabian horses and foreign fruits⁴ with all kinds of choice presents by the hands of the messengers of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn of Lakhnauti who had arrived at his Court bearing many presents,⁵ and at Bihār they heard that the Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn had died, and Sultān Sikandar his son had ascended the throne in the room of his father, so they sent the horses in accordance with orders to the Court at Bihār and conducted the messengers back to Karra.

Saiyyid Rusūldār was sent with the messengers of Lakhnauti⁸ to the Sultān Sikandar at Lakhnauti, and Sikandar despatched five fine elephants with other costly presents and offerings to the Court. And in the year 761 H. The Sultān pursued him part of the way turned back to hunt,⁹ and arrived at the country of Rāi Parihān Dev⁹ who sent a present of thirty-two¹⁰ elephants and other costly offerings. From thence the Sultān coming to Padmāwati and Param Talāo¹¹ which was the haunt of elephants of enormous size, engaged in hunting them and killed two [and they took the other three alive]¹² and Malik Ziaul-Mulk¹³ wrote a quatrain upon this :

248. And in the year 762 H. Accordingly they made an iced sharbat with several elephant and camel loads of cane-sugar which was carried with Sultān Firūz, and he ordered them to read the whole of the Qur'ān for the soul of Sultān Maḥammad and distribute the sharbat among the entire army. Then in the year 776 H. known as Mawās,¹ and gave it the name² of Firūzpūr, and since in later times no other building was ever erected by the Sultān it became commonly known as Ākhirīnpūr.³ Now-a-days although not a trace of that building remains, still from the old bricks and the foundations and general lie of that high ground it is evident that once upon a time there was a building on that site.⁴ The age of the Sultān was now nearly ninety years, and how truly had these verses come to pass—

The Shāhzāda, however, after that he had been in terror for some days and had omitted to pay his respects to the Sultān, one day in private⁷ came into the Sultān's presence and loyally told him the whole truth, and informed him also of the treacherous designs of Khān-i-Jahān, so that the tables were turned.⁸ Obtaining carte blanche from the Sultān to defeat and exterminate Khān-i-Jahān, and having brought over to his Subsequently to this the Shahzāda became Vazir with full uncontrolled powers, and the Sultān having given him all the apparatus of royalty, elephants and horses, servants and insignia, and conferring upon him the title of Naṣiru-d-Din wa-ud Danyā Muḥammad Shāh, in the month of Sha'bān of the above mentioned year raised him to the throne, and betook himself to devotion and worship of the Most High, so that in the Friday Khutbah the names of both kings used to be mentioned; ⁴ Sultān Muḥammad ordered upon a new scale the appointments and salaries of the Amirs, and confirmed the distribution of districts, and having given Malik Ya'qūb the title⁵ of Sikandar Khān appointed him to attack Khān-i-Jahān in Miwāt; Kūkā Onūhān a Zamindār of Miwāt⁶ bound Khān-i-Jahān and sent him to Sikandar Khān, who put him to death,⁷ and having sent his head as a present to the Court of Muḥammad Shāh set out⁸ for Gujrat.

came with the Sipahsālār to Dihli; Muḥammad Shāh, returning from the hill country, with the great carelessness which characterises youth took no thought for avenging Sikandar Khān, but spent his time in enjoyment and luxury, so that the affairs of the kingdom fell into great disorder; and the Sultān's soldiery by reason of their enmity and jealousy against Samāu-d-Din and Kamālu d Din, who were the protégés of Muḥammad Shāh, set themselves up in opposition to them, and assembled in a spacious plain, and stoned and wounded Malik Zāhiru-d-Din Lāhorī whom the Shāhzāda had sent to admonish them. He came in that state before Muḥammad Shāh and informed him of what had happened, whereupon the Shāhzāda having collected forces set out to do battle with that party. The army of the Shāhzāda was victorious at first, and bore back the army of the Sultān, so that they took refuge with the Sultān Firūz. The battle raged fiercely for two days and when the Sultān's body servants found themselves in straits, they bore the Sultān, who was little more than a puppet, to the field of battle and displayed him there, and when the troops of Muḥammad Shāh and his elephant drivers set eyes upon Sultān Firūz they left fighting and came over to the Sultān. Muḥammad Shāh with the small following which remained to him, went towards the Sirmūr hills, and the army of the Sultān, which was near a hundred thousand cavalry and infantry, fell upon the camp of Muḥammad Shāh, and entering his private apartments sacked them and swept them away. The Sultān at the instigation of some interested persons, unwillingly deposed Muḥammad Shāh from his position as heir apparent, and conferring upon Tughlaq Khān¹ the son of Faṭḥ Khān, his grandson, the title of Tughlaq Shāh raised him to the position of heir-apparent. Tughlaq Shāh beheaded Mir Ḥasan the son-in-law of the Sultān, who was a special favourite of Muḥammad Shāh, and having exiled Ghālib Khān the governor of Sāmāna, sent him to the country of Bihār. On the sixteenth of Ramazān in the year 790 H. Sultān Firūz attained deliverance from the tortures of existence, and hastened to the world of permanence, and was buried on the borders of the

All good fortune is till death and no longer,
In the dust one man is no better than another.
When a drop is thrown into the river
It cannot again be recognized.
The nature of the Heavens is to overthrow,
It is of no use to oppose the decree of Fate.
Who knows with the blood of what hearts
This stirred up dust has been mixed !
Every road, if the wise man is not blinded,
Is the hide of the elk, and shagreen from the wild ass.³

Among the poets of the reign of Firūz Shāh and his boon-companions, is Malik Aḥmad, the son of Amir Khusrū, may God have mercy upon him, and although there is no famous anthology of his, still there are some imitations of the writings of the earlier poets which are entered in the writings of some of the learned men; and are well-known. Among them is an imitation of this poem of *Zahīr*⁴ 256.

زهی ربنده ز رفعت کلامه گوشه نو
کلامه گوشه گردون ز روی عیاری⁵

Hail! thou whose cap of empire snatched in its exaltation the ⁴ Zabīr-u-d-Dīn Tāhīr ibn Muḥammad, a co-temporary of Jamāl-u-d-Dīn Iṣfahānī and Ḥakīm Khāqānī Shīrwānī, was a native of Fāryāb.

He died in the year 593. H. and is buried at Sarkhāb of Tabriz which has been called "the Sepulchre of the Poets." His poetry was held in great estimation. (Majma'ul-Fuṣṣḥā I. 330) see also Beale O. B. D., p. 286.

⁵ MS. (A) reads جباری for عیاری see also footnote to text.

and in place of بوده (snatched) in the last hemistich we should read فگنده (thrown)] ;¹ and another is this verse

این سهل سهل بود که گوگرد صرخ خواست
گر نان خواجه خواستی آن را چه کردی

This was extremely easy, that he asked for red sulphur :²
If he had asked bread from the Khwāja, what could I have done ?

which was thus written,

این سهل سهل بود که آب حیات خواست

This would have been very easy had he asked for the water of life.

Another is in this verse,

گرمشک خواند خاک درت را فلک مرنج
نرخ گهر بطن خریدار نشکند

If the sky calls the dust of your door musk, do not grieve,
For the jewel's worth is not affected by the abuse of the purchaser.

The poet had written,

گر لعل خواند سنگ درت مشتری مرنج

If Jupiter calls the gravel at your door rubies, do not grieve.
257. And some of his poems also I have seen, but I remember none of them, and since Malik Ahmad was the real son of Amīr Khusrū, and reminded them of his father, the King and his companions and the learned men of the age were greatly pleased with these imitations and thought them very valuable.

The verse would then read as follows:

زهی عیانچه قهر تو از طریق نغان کلاه گوشه گویون فگنده زمیاری

² Gūgird-i-Aḥmar (Sulphur). The red Gūgird is said to be a mineral of exceeding rarity which is only found in a mine in the Valley of the Ants; the ants of that region are the size of goats. It is said that at night a light is emitted from the mine which may be seen for many leagues, but when the mineral is taken out of the mine it does not possess this luminous property. It is an important ingredient in Al-Iksir (Elixir of life) and just as Quicksilver is called Abūl-arwāḥ (Father of spirits), they call this Abūl-ajsād (Father of bodies).

It has various beneficial qualities (Burhān-i-qāfi).

Another poet was Maulānā Maḡhar Karra,¹ whose descendants are still living in the city of Lakhnauti and have been highly thought of and respected from generations back. There is an anthology of his consisting of fifteen or sixteen thousand verses, but inasmuch as he was more of a Mulla than a poet, his poetry is not so highly esteemed by the learned, although were they to search, they would bring to light many a good thing in the way of rarity (of expression).

Another (poet) is Qāzī 'Ābid² who wrote this poem—

My friends say, 'Ābid with this fine nature of yours
How is it that you have not written more poems and odes ?
To whom shall I address poems and odes, since in our time
No suitable lover and no generous patron has arisen.

This is a translation of the following poem in Arabic—

They say, thou hast given up writing poems, I reply, yes !
perforce ;
The door of claims and causes is closed.
The land is empty—there is no benefactor from whom to hope for favours, nor is there any beauty to love.
And the strange thing is that though no one will buy poetry
Still in spite of this they appropriate and steal it.

In the meantime the Amirs of hundreds of Sāmāna cut to pieces Malik Sultān Shāh Khushdil, the Amir of Sāmāna, who had been sent against the Sultān Muḥammad Shāh to the country at the foot of the hills, at the head of the reservoir of Sāmāna and sacked his house, and sending his head to the Shāhzāda Muḥammad Shāh at Nagarkot invited him to come; Muḥammad Shāh accordingly left Nagarkot, and came to Sāmāna by way of Julandhar by continuous marches, and having gathered together the Muḥammad Shāh, with two thousand cavalry, crossed the river Jamna and entered the Doāb, and sent Humāyūn Khān his younger son to Sāmāna, and having obtained thence a great following and the requirements of sovereignty, and taking with him certain Amīrs of Hindustān with fifty thousand cavalry, a second time marched his standards towards Dihli. As it chanced he became engaged in battle with Abū Bakr Shāh and was again defeated, and Abū Bakr Shāh pursued him part of the way, but considered it an excellent opportunity to return. Muḥammad Shāh arrived at Chaptar,³ which is a town on the banks of the Ganges, and giving over his following to destruction once more attempted to fight. And in the month of Muḥarram of the year 792 H. (1389-90 A.D.) Shāhzāda Humāyūn Khān having called together many Amīrs from the frontier of Sāmāna to reinforce him, laid waste the country round Dihli, engaged in battle in the neighbourhood⁴ of Pānipath with 'Imādu-l-Mulk who had been sent by Abū Bakr (Shāh)⁵ with four thousand cavalry to oppose him, and being defeated retreated towards Sāmāna. And in the month of Jamādīn-l Awwal of the aforesaid year Abū Bakr Shāh marched for Chaptar (Chitar) with a strong force, with the object of opposing Muḥammad Shāh, and had encamped at a distance of twenty kroh from Dihli, when Muḥammad Shāh with four thousand men,¹ passing unobserved round his right flank,² reached Dihli by another route and entered the palace of Humāyūn, where the populace both great and small declared in favour of him; Abū Bakr Shāh pursued him and arrived at Dihli, and having put to death Malik Bahāu-d-Dīn Jangi whom Muḥammad Shāh had left to guard the gates, without hesitation made for the palace of Humāyūn, and Muḥammad Shāh, being taken off his guard, was not able to oppose him and leaving by way of the door of the Hanz-i-Khōṣṣ fled again with all haste to Chaptar (Chitar) his original abode and asylum.³ Many of his noted Amirs and of his body servants were put to death, and although Sultān Muḥammad Shāh was no longer able to stand against Abū Bakr Shāh, still⁴ the soldiery and people were very ill-disposed towards Abū Bakr Shāh, and in the month of Ramazān in the aforesaid year, Mubashir Chap and some of the slaves of Firūz Shāh's party who had been promoted to the rank of Amir, and for one reason or another bore a grudge against Abū Bakr Shāh, opened a secret correspondence⁵ with Muḥammad Shāh, and invited him; ⁶ Abū Bakr Shāh when he came to know of this was utterly dumbfounded, and under pretext of asking assistance from Bahādur Nāhir set his face to go to *Kotila*⁷ of Miwāt, and set out leaving Malik Shāhin and 'Imādu-l-Mulk and Malik Bahāi and Safdar Khān in Dihli; then Muḥammad Shāh in obedience to the invitation of the Amirs entered Dihli for the third time and ascended the throne of royalty in the palace of Firūzābād with great ceremony; and Mubashir Chap, having received the title of Islām Khān, was promoted to the rank of Vazīr, and after some time he left Firūzābād and went to the palace of Humāyūn, Jahān (Numā),¹ and gave orders for the slaves of the Firūzī party who had been a source of disturbance in the days of tumult and riot to be put to death without distinction, and many of the free men also, who came from the eastern quarters of Hindustān were taken for slaves by reason of the imperfection of their pronunciation,² and were put to the sword. Abū Bakr Shāh after this misfortune could not recover himself, and remained at the Kotila (of Miwāt) just as he was till Muḥammad Shāh³ by continuous marches came against him, and Bahādur Nāhir Miwātī and Abū Bakr Shāh who had taken refuge with him, after fighting for a long time begged for quarter and had an interview with Sultān Muḥammad Shāh. Bahādur Nāhir received a robe of honour and other marks of favour, but they imprisoned Abū Bakr Shāh in the fort of Mirath. In that self-same prison he escaped from the prison house of the world. This event took place in the year 793 H. (1390-91 A.D.)⁴ the duration of the reign of Abū Bakr Shāh was a year and a half.

² This passage is not intelligible in itself, but Firishṭa's account explains it fully. He tells us that many of these slaves claimed to be natives of the country and not foreigners, whereupon Muḥammad Shāh imposed upon them the pronunciation of certain words, and those who failed in their pronunciation of this 'Shibboleth' were treated as foreigners and put to death. He writes,

ناصرالدين محمد شاه فرمود كه هر كه از شما كهرا كهري گويد اصيل است
و چون بطوريكه پاد شاه ميخواست تلفظ نميخوانستند نمود و بزيان مردم پورب
و بنگاله ادا ميگردند كشته ميشدند - Firishṭa Bo. text p. 267.

Muḥammad Shāh said "whoever among you instead of Kharā says Khārī, is a native of the country," and since (as the King in fact desired) they were not able to pronounce these words, but followed the pronunciation of people of the East and of Bengal they were put to death.

The word Khārī signified brackish as applied to water: natives of Eastern Bengal however use the word Khārā in place of Khārī, using the word as if it were an adjective agreeing with the masculine word pānī, water.

³ The Hauz-i-Khāṣṣ was a reservoir constructed by Firūz Shāh, one of his many public works. It is said in the Zafarnāma of Yazdī to be "so large that an arrow cannot be shot from one side to the other. It is filled by rain in the rainy season and the people of Dihli obtain water from it all the year round. The tomb of Firūz Shāh is by its side." Elliott, III, 441-501.

SULTĀN MAḤMŪD SHĀH IBN-I-MUHAMMAD SHĀH,

Who was his youngest son,³ ascended the throne⁴ on the twentieth of Jumādiul-Awwal⁵ in the aforesaid year relying upon the allegiance of the Amirs,⁶ with the title of Sultān Nāsiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd, and having bestowed upon Muqarrabu-l-Mulk the title of Muqarrab Khān, he made him his heir apparent,⁷ and confirmed to the Amirs their appointments⁸ districts and titles; and with a view to restoring order in the important affairs of State, which had suffered in consequence of the dominance of the perverse infidels, he bestowed the title of Sultān-sh-Sharq⁹ upon Khawāj-i-Jahān, and transferred him from Qanauj to Bihār with full powers and uncontrolled authority, and despatched him thither. He proceeded as far as Jājnagar¹⁰ and took possession of it, ¹ And was buried beside his father and grandfather on the edge of the Hanz-i-Khāss. He reigned one month and fifteen days (Firishṭa).

He also rebuilt¹ the greater number of the forts which the infidels had destroyed, in the districts of Karra, Oudh, Sandila, Malūta,² Bahraich and Tirhut, and despatched Sārang Khān³ to the district of Dibālpūr to quell the rising of Shaikhā Khūkhar. And in the month of Zū Qu'dah of the same year Shaikhā Khūkhar⁴ fought a sharp engagement with Sārang Khān, at a place called Sāmōthala⁵ which is twelve krohs from Lahore, but was defeated and retired to the hill country of Jamūn; Sārang Khān thereupon left Lahore in charge of his brother 'Ādil Khān,⁶ and returned towards Dibālpūr.

And in the month of Sha'bān of this year Sultān⁶ Maḥmūd leaving Muqarrab Khān as his Viceroy in Dilli, and taking with him Sa'ādut Khān, who was commonly known⁷ as 'Abdu-r-Rashīd Sultān, marched in the direction of Biāna and Gwālīar. In obedience to the order of the Sultān a spacious chief mosque⁸ built of stone was erected in the town of Basāwar, and is standing at the present time, and when⁹ the Sultān arrived near Gwālīar, Malik 'Alāu-d-Din Dhārwal, and Malloo Khān¹⁰ the brother of Sārang Khān, and Mubārak Khān son of Malik Rājū¹¹ conspired against Sa'ādut Khān, but he, becoming aware of their design, arrested Malik 'Alāu-d-Din and Mubārak Khān and had them put to death.¹²

Malloo Khān fled to Muqarrab Khān in Dihli. The Sultān having returned to the Capital, encamped at some distance from the city, and Muqarrab Khān fearing his displeasure because he had given asylum to Malloo Khān,¹ entrenched himself and prepared to fight² and remained in his fortified position three months, and war arose between Muqarrab Khān and Sa'adat Khān.³

And in the month of Muḥarram in the year 797 H. (Nov. 1394 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd was induced by the deceitfulness of certain friends of Muqarrab Khān to leave Sa'adat Khān, to enter the fort and come to terms with Muqarrab Khān, who thus obtained the assistance he needed. The following day Muqarrab Khān and Sa'adat Khān met on the field of battle, and Muqarrab Khān being defeated again entered the fort. Sa'adat Khān went to Firūz-ābād,⁴ and acting in concert with some of the Amirs summoned Nuṣrat Khān son of Faṭḥ Khān and grandson of Sultān Firūz Shāh⁵ from Miwāt, and set him upon the throne in the month of Rabi' u-l-Awwal of the aforesaid year, with the title of Nāsiru-d-Din Nuṣrat Shāh. Nuṣrat Shāh was nothing more than a puppet, for Sa'adat Khān assumed the whole of the authority in state matters, and some slaves of the Firūzī party and some elephant drivers joined with Sultān Nuṣrat Shāh, and by some clever artifice placed him upon an elephant, and without warning fell upon Sa'adat Khān unawares in full force; Sa'adat Khān was paralysed and helpless, and⁶ of necessity took to flight and came Firishṭa writes as follows:—Muqarrab Khān came out to receive the Sultān and to pay his respects, but becoming alarmed at the splendour and array of the royal court, because of his having given asylum to Malloo Khān, fled to the city where he fortified a position and began to fight. The quarrel lasted for some three months, with frequent engagements between the besiegers and the besieged, when recognizing that this was all due to Sa'adat Khān Bārbak, Nāsiru-d-Din Maḥmūd Shāh at the instigation of his intimates entered the city upon a favourable opportunity in the month of Muḥarram 797 H, and came to terms with Muqarrab Khān, who on the following day started from Dihli to fight against Sa'adat Khān, but was defeated and forced to return to the city." Sulṭān Maḥmūd was known as King in Dihli, while in Firūzābād Nuṣrat Shāh enjoyed that title,⁴ and Muqarrab Khān placed the citadel of old Dihli under the command of Bahādur Nāhir Miwātī, and bestowed upon Malloo Khān⁵ the title of Iqbāl Khān,⁶ and day by day battles were fought between these two kings,⁷ who were like the two kings in the game of chess.⁸ Sulṭān Nuṣrat Shāh retained possession of the country of the Doāb, and Sanbhal, Pānipath, Rohtak, and Jahjar,⁹ while a few old ruined forts such as Dihli and Siri and the rest, remained in the hands of Sulṭān Maḥmūd, and from that time forward this proverb became a common expression: The rule of the Lord of the world (Khudāwand-i-Ālam) is from Dihli to Pālam.¹⁰ And all over Hiudustān there arose various parties each with its own Malik.¹¹

And in the year 798 H. (1395 A.D.) many battles took place between the Masnad-i-'Alī,² Khizr Khān, the Amīr of Multān, and Sārang Khān the ruler of Dipālpūr, and, eventually, owing to the treachery of certain of the slaves of Malik Marwān, who was the tutor of Malik Suleimān the father of Khizr Khān, and in consequence of their throwing in their lot with Sārang Khān the governor of Dipālpūr,³ Multān passed from the possession of Khizr Khān to that of Sārang Khān, and his party began to grow weaker and weaker every day.

And in the year 799 H. (1396 A.D.) Sārang Khān having overcome⁴ Ghālīb Khān the governor of Sāmāna, and Tātār Khān the Wālī of Pānīpath, gained possession of the country as far as the outskirts of Dīhli.⁵ Sultān Nuṣrat Shāh sent Malik Ilyās⁶ a slave of the Firūz Shāhī party with elephants and an army to reinforce Tātār Khān. He accordingly drove Sārang Khān out of Sāmāna and delivered it to Ghālīb Khān.⁷

And in the month of Muḥarram 800 H. (1397 A.D.) a severe engagement took place between the two parties in the neighbourhood of the village of Kotla; Sārang Khān was defeated⁸ and fled towards Multān, and Tātār Khān proceeded to the frontier of Tilāundi, and sending Kamālu-d-Dīn Mubīn in pursuit of Sārang Khān, returned. The greater number of Malik Tāju-d-Dīn's force fell by the sword, while those who escaped the sword were drowned in the floods of destruction;⁵ and Mirzā Pir Muḥammad⁶ after gaining this victory pursued them with all speed,⁷ and invested the fortress of Multān.⁸ Sārang Khān held out against him for six months engaging him frequently, but at last begged for quarter, and had an interview with the Mirzā,⁹ who took up his station in Multān pending the arrival of the great Timūr.

* MS. (A) گورگانی. Gurgānī. The exact meaning of this title has been much discussed; the most recent opinion is that of Dr. Erdmann, according to whom "Kurkān or Gurgān stands for 'son-in-law' or for a prince who is allied by marriage with some "mighty monarch." In this way, its Mongol sense, it is used, he tells us by Rashīdu-d-Dīn. He also tells us that Kurkān or Gurgān represents the Chinese expression Fu-mā and that the Amīr Timūr was called Timūr Fu-mā by the Chinese, because he married the daughter of Chun-ti, the ninth and last Emperor of the Mongol dynasty. Fu-mā in fact means "son-in-law" in Chinese, when applied to princes, and thus is a translation of the Mongol word."

And in the month of Shawwāl in the aforesaid year Iqbāl Khān, who is better known as Malloo, swore many oaths of allegiance to Sultān Nuṣrat Shāh, whom he deported to the fortress of Jahānumā,¹ taking him away with elephants and an armed force; and Sultān Maḥmūd and Muqarrab Khān and Bahādur Nāhir shut themselves up in old Dihli. On the third day from this Iqbāl Khān made a sudden attack in strong force upon Nuṣrat Shāh hoping to take him by surprise; Nuṣrat Shāh fled from Jahānumā and came to Firūzābād,² and leaving there crossed the Jamna and went to join Tātār Khān his Vazir at Pānipath. The whole³ of the army and elephants of Nuṣrat Shāh fell into the hands of the astute Iqbāl Khān, and for two whole months daily battles were fought between Muqarrab Khān and Iqbāl Khān, until by the intervention of certain Amirs peace was established between these two leaders; but after a few days⁴ Iqbāl Khān proceeded against Muqarrab Khān,⁵ and without warning suddenly surrounded him and besieged him; and after giving him assurances of safety raised him to the dignity of martyrdom, and getting Sultān Maḥmūd into his power made a puppet of him and took the management of the state into his own hands. Then in the month of Zū Qa'dah of the aforesaid⁶ year Iqbāl Khān wrested Pānipath by force from the followers of Tātār Khān, and seized all his baggage and his elephants and army. Tātār Khān previously to this expedition of Iqbāl Khān, had left Pānipath with the intention of attempting to reduce Dihli but found himself quite unequal to the task, and throwing his country⁷ to the winds left Dihli and went to Gujrāt with a large following to join his father.⁸ Iqbāl Khān coming to Dihli bestowed upon Malik Naṣīru-l-Mulk, a relation of Tātār Khān who had joined him, the title of ʿĀdil Khān, and placed under his control the district of the Doāb. Leaving there⁵ and taking Sāmāna, he put to death crowds of fugitives from Dipālpūr and Ajūdhan and Sarsuti,⁶ who were helplessly fleeing in all directions in terror of their lives, and taking large numbers of them prisoners he took them along with him, and covering great distances he crossed the river Jamna, and entered the Doāb,⁷ and sweeping the greater part of the country

Firishṭa says. "Arrived at a place where the river of Jamū and the Chenāb meet where there was a strong fortress called Talanbha." Briggs says "to the conflux of the Chumab with the Ravy."

From Tulumba Firishṭa tells us Timūr marched to Shāhnawāz where they took all the grain they required and burned the remainder. From thence he went to Ajūdhan and Bhatnir. Shāhnawāz is shewn in Rennell's map on the Eastern bank of the Rāvi, Long. 72° E. Lat. 30° 5. N. Ajūdhan is Pāk Pattan, and is about 80 miles S.-W. of Shāhnawāz. Here is the tomb of Shaikh Faridu-d-Dīn Ganjī Shakkār which was visited by Timūr. From Ajūdhan to Bhatnir is about 80 miles. Firishṭa says from Khālīškōl to Bhatnir is fifty Kroh. See Elliott III. 415 et seqq. for the description of this campaign translated from the Malṣūzāt-i-Timūri. Timūr calls Khālīškōl, Khālīškōtālī, and says it is ten kos from Ajūdhan and fifty from Bhatnir.

270. Then in the month of Jamādu-l-Awwal 801 H. the great Timūr crossed the Jamna and encamped at Firūzābād⁵ and the next day encamped above the Hauz-i-Khāss. Shaikh Aḥmad Khaṭṭu was born at Dihlī A.H. 787 (A.D. 1336) of a noble family of that city. His name was Naṣīru-d-Dīn. He was a disciple of Bābā Ishāq Maghribī, and came to Gujārāt in the reign of Sultān Aḥmad Gujārātī (A.D. 1411-13). He was buried in Sarkheh near Aḥmadābād, (Āin-i-Akbarī [Jarrett], III. 371).

Shaikh Aḥmad Khaṭṭu surnamed Ganjbakhsh was surnamed from Khaṭṭu a village near Nāgor, the residence of his spiritual guide Bābā Ishāq Maghribī. After his return from a pilgrimage to the holy places he came back to Gujārāt and settled first at Sarkhej and afterwards at Aḥmadābād, in the building of which he was associated with Sultān Aḥmad, A.H. 813-20.

He died at Sarkhej in 849 A.H., aged 111 years, and his mausoleum with the buildings attached are said to have been begun by Muḥammad Shāh I, the son of Aḥmad Shāh, and to have been completed by his son and successor Qutbu-d-Dīn Shāh. See Bayley, History of Gujārāt, pp. 90-91, notes.

This signal service of the Shaikh remained ever as a debt upon the people of Hindustān; and a full detail of this circumstance is given at length in the Maqāmāt of the Shaikh. A few days after 271. this victory Khizr Khān and Bahādur Nāhir Miwāti,² who had taken alarm and fled to the hill country of Miwāt, came in and paid their respects to the Great Timūr;³ orders were issued to make all of their party prisoners, with the exception of Khizr Khān, who had apparently done some former good service which saved him. After this he raised the banner of return and seized the country at the foot of the Siwālik hills,⁴ and greatly shook that hill country as it were with an earthquake, ere he reached Lāhor.

For the date of this victory they assigned the two words رځا (Rakhā, affluence, prosperity) and خار (Khār,⁵ a thorn); and Shaikhā Khūkhar⁶ also, who had formerly served the Amīr and had taken Lāhor by fraud from Sārang Khān, fell into his hands. ² On Friday the 24th of Rabi'ū-l-Ākhir according to the Malfūzāt-i-Timūri, which gives a different account of the treatment accorded to them.

³ Badāoni omits to mention the capture of Mirat (29th Rabi'ū-l-Ākhir) and the victories on the Ganges (Jamādiu-l-Awwal 1st to 15th).

⁴ According to the account in the Malfūzāt-i-Timūri this was in response to an embassy sent to Bahādur Nāhir by Timūr at Kūtila.

⁵ Both of these words give the date. رځا = 200 + 600 + 1 = 801 خار = 600 + 1 + 200 = 801.

said to him ¹ 'I have taken Dihli and have made a present of it to you.' Leaving Lāhor he proceeded by uninterrupted marches by way of Kābul to his capital Samarqand while Khizr Khān went to his own territory (jāgīr).

At this time such a famine and pestilence fell upon Dihli that the city was utterly ruined, and those of the inhabitants who were left died, while for two whole months not a bird moved a wing in Dihli. In this interval Sulṭān Nuṣrat Shāh, who after his defeat by Iqbāl Khān had gone into the Doāb, seeing that he had an open field, went first to Mirath and thence to Firūzābād, and fortified the city of Dihli. 'Adil Khān and the other folk who had escaped from the hands of the Mughuls, coming out of the various holes and corners where they had been hiding, gathered round him; when he had got together this company he nominated Shihāb Khān to proceed to Baran against Iqbāl Khān. Whilst he was on the way, a body of Hindūs attacked Shihāb Khān suddenly by night, and raised him to the dignity of martyrdom. Iqbāl Khān with great energy and promptitude obtained possession of his elephants and army, so that from day to day his power increased, while the affairs of Nuṣrat Shāh, became more and more entangled. Iqbāl Khān leaving Baran, started in the direction of Dihli, and Nuṣrat Shāh leaving Firūzābād made for Miwāt where he died, and the four quarters of Hindustān came under the dominion of Malik of the various tribes.²

Then in the year 802 H. (1399 A.D.) Iqbāl Khān marched against Shams Khān Auhadi³ the ruler of Baiāna, and the hostile forces met in the vicinity of Nūh and Patal; fortune favoured Iqbāl Khān and Shams Khān proceeded to Baiāna. Iqbāl Khān led his army towards Kaithar and exacted contributions of money and services from Rāi Harsingh.⁴ And in this same year Khwāja-i-Jahān was received into the mercy of God in Jaunpūr.

² Firishṭa tells us the names of these various independent rulers. See Briggs I. 498.

³ According to Firishṭa this was in 803 H.

⁴ MS. (A) رای هر سنگه Rāi Harsing was Rāi of Itāwa. By Kaithar or Katehar is meant Rohilkhand. See Thomas Pathān Kings, p. 325, note 2.

How long wilt thou say "Who has drunk the cup of pleasure?"
 How long wilt thou say "Who has gained the palm of fortune?"
 What avail all these idle tales, for we must depart,
 What profit in all these empty stories, since death must come.

And Malik Mubārak Qaranqal,¹ having assumed the title of Mubārak Shāh, took his place.

273. And in Jamā'idu-l-Awwal² in the year 803 H. (1400 A.D.) Shams Khān of Baiāna and Mubārak Khān son of Bahādur Nāhir had an interview with Iqbāl Khān, who taking them with him fought a battle near Baitālī on the banks of the Blackwater, which is known as the Kālāpānī, with Rāi Sir³ the ruler of that district, and overcame him, and pursued the infidels as far as the confines of Itāwa; and on his arrival at Qananj, Sultānu-sh-Sharq Mubārak Shāh came up from Jaunpūr and sat down over against him on the other bank of the river Ganges, but inasmuch as neither of them could effect a crossing, they each returned⁴ to their own country without doing anything. As he returned, Iqbāl Khān treacherously put to death Shams Khān and Mubārak Khān.⁵ In this same year Turkbacha Sultānī, the son-in-law of Ghālib Khān of Sāmāna, collected a large army, and on the ninth of Rajab of this year fought a battle with Khizr Khān near Ajūdhan, and being defeated went to the town of Bhūhar, where Ghālib Khān in concert with the other Amirs put him to death.

³ Firigha (Bo. text) says.

و چون بقصد بیتالی که کنار نهر گنگ است رسید رای سنیر بمقابل آمد

Whence he arrived at the township of Baitālī on the banks of the Ganges Rāi Sapir ... came out to oppose him.

Briggs says:—"When he reached the village of Puttyaly on the Ganges the Ray of Serinagar ... opposed him"

The Kālāpānī is the Kālī Naddī or Kālīnī (see Hunter Imp. Gazett. VII. 327) lying between the Jumna and Ganges. Tīmūr calls it the Karāsū (Black water), Elliott, III. 452.

⁴ The text here is wrong; for باز کشیدند read باز کشید MS. (A).

⁵ MS (A) only says Shams Khān, but Firigha's account includes Mubārak Khān so that the text is probably correct.

And in the year 804 H. (1401 A.D.) Sultān Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad Shāh arrived at Dihli from Dhār, and although Iqbāl Khān went out to receive him, and caused him to alight at the Jahān Numā¹ palace with all expressions of service and manifestations of respect, still, since Iqbāl Khān was in possession of all the paraphernalia of royalty, Sultān Maḥmūd became very jealous of him and took him with him towards Qanauj. And in this year Maliku-sh-Sharq Mubārak Shāh died, and his younger brother Sultān Ibrāhīm succeeded him, and came out to fight with Sultān Maḥmūd and Iqbāl Khān. Sultān Maḥmūd before engaging in conflict left the army of Iqbāl Khān under pretence of a hunting expedition, and had an interview with Sultān Ibrāhīm who treated him with scant ceremony; Sultān Maḥmūd accordingly removed Shāhzāda Faṭḥ Khān of Herāt, who was holding Qanauj on behalf of Mubārak Shāh, and took that fortress under his own control. The populace of Qanauj, both people and soldiery, joined Sultān Maḥmūd, and Sultān Ibrāhīm returned to Jaunpūr, while Iqbāl Khān retraced his steps towards Dihli, so that Sultān Maḥmūd was left in undisputed and contented possession of Qanauj.

And in the year 805 H. (1402 A.D.) Iqbāl Khān made an 274. attack upon the country round the fortress of Gwāliār, which Rāi Harsingh² had taken by treachery from the Muslims during the invasion of Timūr, and wresting it from the possession of Bairām Dev the son of Harsingh,³ took it into his own control.

And in the year 806 H. (1403 A.D.) Tātār Khān the son of Zafar Khān, forgetting his filial duty took his father prisoner by treachery and sent him to Asāwal, assuming to himself the title of Sultān Nāsiru-d-Dīn Muḥammad Shāh, and set out at the head of a large army with the intention of attempting to reduce Dihli. While he was on the way his uncle Shams Khān administered poison to him and removed him, then he released Zafar Khān and the whole army joined him.

¹ MS. (A) reads جهان پنلا Jahānpanāh. This was the name given to the central portion of the triple citadel of Dihli connecting old Dihli with Siri. It was situated in the midst of the inhabited city, and had thirteen gates; of the other two, Siri had seven gates, and old Dihli ten gates. See Elliott, III. 448. The palace was called Jahān Numā as in the text.

² Firsihta calls him نورنگه Narasingh.

³ Both MSS. and text read نورنگه Harsingh.

Verse.

A parricide is not fitted to be a king,
And even if he is fitted he will not last for more than six months.

And in the year 807 H. (1404 A.D.) Iqbāl Khān marched towards Gwālīār and Itāwa, the Rāis of which districts all took refuge within the fortress of Itāwa, and stood siege for four months; at last they made overtures for peace, sending four elephants and other presents of suitable nature. Iqbāl Khān leaving there came to Qānanj, and fought with Sultān Maḥmūd, but was unable to effect his purpose owing to the strength of the fortifications, so returned to Dillī without accomplishing his object.

And in the Muḥarram of the year 808 H. (1405 A.D.) he marched for Sāmāna, and from thence came to Rūpar,¹ and by stratagem laid hands upon Bahrām Khān Turkbacha, who had been an antagonist of Sārang Khān, and flayed his head. Leaving Rūpar he proceeded towards Multān, intending to fight with Khizr Khān, and at Talaundi taking with him Rāi Kāmāl-d-Dīn Muḥīn and the other Zamīndārs, on the nineteenth of the month of Jumādīu-l-Awwal in the abovementioned year, he engaged in battle with Khizr Khān in the neighbourhood of ² Ajūdhan the ancient name of Pākpattan. Lat. 30° 20' 40" N. Long. 73° 25' 50" E. It is known as Pākpattan, or Ferry of the Pure, from Shaikh Farīdu-d-Dīn Ganj Shakkār who is buried there. The saint was called Ganj Shakkār as he was reputed to have the miraculous power of turning into sugar whatever he put into his mouth, even earth and stones. Pilgrims from all parts of India, Afghanistan, and Central Asia flock to this shrine, and during the Muḥarram festival as many as 60,000 persons have been present. During the afternoon and night of the last day the crowds vie with one another in attempting to gain access to a narrow opening in a wall near the shrine known as the "Gate of Paradise." Whoever can force his way-through this opening during the prescribed hours is assured of an entrance into Paradise. For this reason the crush is excessive and many are injured.

See Hunter Imp. Gaz. X. 532-533, also Cunningham (A. G. I.) 214-219.

ill-fortune attended Iqbāl Khān,¹ he was defeated in the very first engagement, and his horse being wounded could not bear him off the field, so that the soldiers of Khizr Khān pursued him, and cutting off his head sent it to Fathpur, one of the dependencies of Multān. And in the month of Jumaidu-l-Ākhir of this year Sultān Maḥmūd came from Qanauj at the invitation of the Amirs of Dihli, and once more sat upon the throne of Dihli, and conferred appointments upon the Amirs, and sent the family of Mubārak Khān to Kol. And in the month of Jumaidu-l-Awwal of the year 809 H. (1406 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd marched with a force towards Qanauj, and Sultān Ibrāhīm came out thence and crossed the Ganges, but they both turned back without fighting.²

Sultān Ibrāhīm went towards Jaunpūr, and Sultān Maḥmūd towards Dihli, but seeing that the Amirs of Sultān Maḥmūd's army one after the other left for their own districts as they came to them in the march, Sultān Ibrāhīm turned back and besieged Qanauj; Malik Maḥmūd Tarmatī, who was holding Qanauj for Sultān Maḥmūd, kept Sultān Ibrāhīm engaged in fighting for four months, but when he saw that no reinforcements were arriving from any quarter he was forced to sue for peace, and surrendered Qanauj to Sultān Ibrāhīm.³ Sultān Ibrāhīm passed the rainy season at Qanauj, and then having made over that district to Ikhtiyār Khān the grandson of Malik Danlat Yār of Kaupila, started to reduce Dihli.

tributary stream which left the main river to the eastward of Ajūdhan, and flowing south-west joined it again some 35 miles lower down. This explains Badāoni's statement. The town of Ajūdhan is generally said to have stood upon the bank of the Satlaj itself. Cunningham (A. G. of India 214) says "The ancient town of Ajūdhan is situated on the high bank of the old Satlej 28 miles to the south-west of Depalpur and 10 miles from the present course of the river" (1871 A.D.) But from Badāoni's statement it is clear that Ajūdhan stood, not on the banks of the Satlaj itself, but on a southern loop or tributary stream. It is the modern Pākputan, see note 2.

¹ There is a play on the words اقبال Iqbāl, good fortune and ابل abl, bad fortune.

The text has the words فتح کرده which seem to be superfluous. They are not in MS. (A).

And in the year 810 H. (1407 A.D.) Nuṣrat Khān Karkandāz,¹ and Tātār Khān the son of Sāraṅg Khān, and Malik Marḥabā the slave of Iqbāl Khān, turned against Sultān Maḥmūd and joined Sultān Ibrāhīm, and Asad Khān Lodi fortified himself in Sām-bhal. The following day Sultān Ibrāhīm reduced the fortress of Sambhal and gave it to Tātār Khān: then crossing the Gauges he encamped on the banks of the Jamnā near the fort of Kicha in the vicinity of Dihli, where he learned that Zafar Khān had taken the district of Dhār² and was making his way to Jaunpūr;³ accordingly leaving Malik Marḥabā in Baran, he reached Jaunpūr by continuous marches; Sultān Maḥmūd pursued him and having killed Malik Marḥabā in battle, and taking Sambhal⁴ without a fight, left there Bāsad Khān after his usual custom. Tātār Khān marched to Qanauj and the Sultān came to Dihli. And in this year Khizr Khān came with a large force and drove Daulat Khān out of Sāmāna.⁵ The Amirs of that district all sought an interview with him, and the whole country as far as to the outskirts of Dihli fell into his hands; only Rohtak and the Doāb remained in the possession of Sultān Maḥmūd.

And in the year 811 H. (1408 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd proceeding to Hissār Firūz took it⁶ from Qiwām Khān to whom Khizr Khān had given it, and having taken possession of it, on arriving at the village of Rata⁷ turned back towards Dihli: Khizr Khān then

And in the year 812 H. (1409 A.D.)³ Bairām Khān Turkbacha,⁴ who after the death of Bahrām Khān Turkbacha had become master of Sāmāna, and had been defeated in a battle with Daulat Khān, and again revolting against Khizr Khān had had a second interview with Daulat Khān, now offered his services to Khizr Khān, and received a confirmation of the grant of the districts formerly held by him in fief. And in the year 813 H. (1410 A.D.) Khizr Khān besieged the fortress of Rohtak⁵ for six months, and after reducing it proceeded to Fathpūr.⁶ In this year Sultān Maḥmūd made an expedition to Kaithar and arrived at the capital Dihli.

⁸ Miwāt. For an account of this Province see Hunter Imp. Gaz. Vol. IX, pp. 418 and segg. from which the substance of this note is taken :

The Meos, a tribe which gave their name to this province were of obscure origin claiming to be Rājput, but probably a combination from various stocks and sources and nearly allied to the Minas. The original Meos probably became converts to Islam at the time of Maḥmūd of Ghazna; their customs are a mixture of Hindū and Musulmān observances.

The province of Miwāt lay south of Dihli and in Mughul times formed part of the Śubāh of Agra. Its most famous towns were Narnaul, Ulwar,

Maḥmūd in the fortress of Sirī, which is part of Dihlī,¹ and Ikhtiyār Khān in Firozābād, and fighting several fierce battles, was prevented from maintaining the siege² by reason of the dearness of grain, and returned to Fathpūr by way of Pānīpath.³

And in the year 815 H. (1412 A.D.)⁴ Sultān Maḥmūd departed from this world, and the kingdom passed from the family of Firāz Shāh. The duration of his reign, full as it was of turmoil and vicissitudes, was twenty years⁵ and two months, during which Sultān Maḥmūd had had only the name of sovereignty.

Tijāra and Rewāri. Bahādur Nāhir (who is frequently mentioned in the text) was the founder of the Khanzāda race, long the rulers of Miwāt.

The province of Miwāt included part of the British districts of Muntra, Gurgāon, a considerable portion of Ulwar, and some of Bhartpūr.

See Tieffenthaler. Vol. III. Map. where the province is marked.

See Hunter Imp. Gaz. XI. 44.

⁴ In the month of Zū Qa'da (Firishta). Firishta does not state the year though taken in connection with what has gone before he appears to mean 814 H. but see n 2: Badāoni however agrees, with the Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhi. On this point see Thomas, Pathān Kings, p. 317, note.

⁵ MS. (A) reads here,

و مدت ملک بان همه نازل و انقلاب نورده سال و دو ماه بود

Firishta has almost the same words but says بیست سال twenty, years as in the text. So also the Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhi.

Firishta's statement is not very clear as to the year in which Maḥmūd died, but as he goes on to say that after his death the Amirs gave in their allegiance to Daulat Khān Lodi, who struck the coinage, &c., in Muḥarram of 818 H. it is tolerably clear that he means Zu-l-Qa'da 815 H. as the date of Maḥmūd's death, and not 814 H. as Briggs would have it.

Ancient astronomers were not agreed as to the number of stars included in the Hyades. Thales reckoned two only (α and ε) the two eyes of the Bull. (Smith, Dict. Greek and Rom. Antiq. 150 a).

⁴ The constellation Taurus is here spoken of as having lost one of his two eyes by which must be meant the two clusters of stars above mentioned, and not α and ε of Taurus as reckoned by Thales.

قبلة خلق و قيام دول و دين مسعود

A foot-note to the Calcutta text states that the reading there given is the same in all three MSS. of Badāoni and that probably the word ش has dropped out after the word دين. This is a quite unnecessary supposition. The reading above given fulfils all requirements. MS. (B) corresponds save that for دول it reads دول an evident copyist's error.

قبلة Qiblah. This is the direction in which Muslims are bound to turn during prayer: This is laid down in the Qur'an, Surā II. "We see thee often turn thy face about in the heavens, but we will surely turn thee to a qiblah thou shalt like. Turn then thy face towards the sacred Mosque, wherever ye be turn your faces towards it" (v. 139). From the Hijra, Muḥammad at first directed his followers to turn towards the temple at Jerusalem, but in the second year of the Hijra the Ka'bah at Mekka was fixed as the qiblah. See Hughes' Dict. of Islam, s. v. Qiblah.

³ قاضي چرخ Qāzī-i-Charkh. The planet Jupiter.

⁴ MS. (A) reads incorrectly هبيدار پاس.

⁵ This couplet is inevitably ridiculous to English ears: the meaning is that in order to deprive him of the pleasures of the perfumed breezes, he has been afflicted with the anosmia which results from a cold in the head.

The heavens have apportioned every arrow of thine to one of the various families,

It were not possible to allot the arrows¹ in any better way than this.

¹ سهام Sihām, called also قِدَاح qidāḥ, These are the arrows used by the ancient Arabs for gambling in the manner called الميسر Al-maisar (forbidden in the Qur'ān, II. 216, v. 92, 93). In this game a camel was bought and slaughtered, and divided into twenty-eight portions which were drawn for with ten arrows called اَزْلَام azlām. The numbers after the names of the arrows indicate the value of the share drawn, فِذ faḍḍ (1), تَوَام tau'am (2), مَعْلَى ma'ālī (3), رَقِيب raqīb (4), نَافِيس nāfis (5), حَلَسِ hils (6), مُسْبَل musbal (7), مُوَالِيق muwālīq (7).

The remaining three arrows were blanks and gained no share. Their names were سَفِيح safih, مَنِيع manīh, وَغْد waghḍ. The name of each arrow was written upon it and they were all put into a bag called رِبَابَة ribābah, and given into the charge of a trustworthy man known as الْمُجِيل al-mujīl or الْمُفِض al-mufiḍ whose duty was to shake the arrows up and draw out one for each in turn. Whoever drew a blank had to pay the cost of the camel, while those who drew a winning arrow received a proportionate share according to the value of the arrow. See Majma'u-l-Baḥra'in, Maqāmah, XIII. p. 99.

The month of Dai¹ has arrived, and the air has in consequence become so cold²

That nothing save the icy breeze can move from its place.

The earth is cold and frost bound,³ the air is even colder than the earth,

In very truth the air is chill with the weariness of age.

In the garden the fire of the tulip and Gulnār have died down,

From the cold the (graceful) trees of the garden have become mere sticks.

The water is hard frozen from the cold, and says with petulance,

I will break if anyone places his foot upon my head.

No single bud comes out from its resting place in the heart of the tree, although it wears upon its cypress-like body a cap and mantle.

The bird has ceased its song when it saw the havoc wrought by autumn,

When a general pillage is going on, lamentation is futile.

Seek not for leaves and seed-bearing fruit in the garden, for to-day

The leaves have been scattered by the wind, the seeds remain hidden beneath the earth.

The morning breeze draws every breath like a deep drawn sigh, Seeing that it has cast to the winds so beauteous a being as the rose.

So far has the rose gone that should you search the East and the West,

You will not find it save in the assembly of the King of the World.

said to have been Joshua, and the servant who guided them (v. 64) was no less than Khizr himself, and when Moses asked if he should follow him said, "Verily thou canst never have patience with me. How canst thou be patient in what thou comprehendest no knowledge of." Khizr upon being assured by Moses that he would be patient bade him to follow but not to ask about anything he might see. They embarked in a ship which Khizr scuttled, whereupon Moses naturally asked the reason and was rebuked. Further on they met a boy whom Khizr killed and again roused Moses' impatience; again they found a wall which Khizr prevented from falling without exacting any reward for his services, and again Moses became impatient whereupon Khizr said, "This is the parting between me and thee" and explained to Moses the reason for his action in each case. See Qur'an XVIII. 64 and following verses.

And in truth after Qāzī Zahir no poet arose in Hindūstān whose poetry repaid the trouble of reading. After the death of Sultān Maḥmūd the great Amīrs of Hindūstān as for instance Mubārīz Khān and Malik Idris who was the ruler of Rohtak, quarrelled with Khizr Khān and were disposed to make common cause with Daulat Khān, Khizr Khān accordingly stood fast in Fathpūr and made no expeditions to any country.

In Muḥarram of the year 816 H. (1414 A.D.) Daulat Khān having gone towards Kaithar on a hunting expedition and having brought the Rās of that district into his toils, went to Baitālī, and Mahābat Khān the Wālī of Badāon came thither and joined him. And in this year Sultān Ibrāhīm besieged Qādir Khān the son of Maḥmūd Khān in Kālpī, and Daulat Khān being very short handed, ignored him, and omitted to send reinforcements to either of these places; and Khizr Khān in Zū-l-qa'da of this year came to the fortress of Firūzābād,¹ the Amīrs of which district came into him, and Malik Idris was besieged in Rohtak. Khizr Khān marched by that route to Miwāt and taking with him Jalāl Khān Miwātī the brother's son of Bahādur Nāhir, conveyed him to Sanbal which place he pillaged, and in Zū Hijjah of that same year he encamped before the gates of Dihlī with the intention of taking it; Daulat Khān held out for four months, but at last was compelled by the want of agreement with Malik Lonā and the other supporters of Khizr Khān to sue for peace, humbly and earnestly. He had an interview with Khizr Khān who threw him into prison, and delivered him to Qiwām Khān who conveyed him to the fortress of Firūza and slew him. This happened in the year 816 H. (1414 A.D.) on the seventeenth of Rabi'ul-Awwal.² raised the standards of monarchy, became firmly established upon the throne of sovereignty.

This Malik Suleimān had been exalted in his childhood by Malik Naṣīru-l-Mulk Marwān Firūz Shāhī to the rank of a son, and had been educated accordingly. In real truth he was a Saiyyidzāda of high family, so that on one occasion Makhdūm-i-Jahāniyān Saiyyidu-s-Sādāt, the fountain of dignities, Shāikh Jalālu-l-Haqq wau-s-Shara'wau-d-din al-Bukhāri may God sanctify his soul, came for some important purpose into the house of Malik Marwān Daulat; food was served, and Malik Suleimān brought the ewer and bason to Makhdūm intending to pour water over his august hands. Makhdūm addressing him by the title of Malik Marwān Daulat, said, This lad is a Saiyyid Zāda, and it is derogatory to him to allot him such a menial service. From that day forth, it was known that Malik Suleimān was an undoubted Saiyyid; but besides this, the signs of Saiyyidship, and good qualities and praiseworthy traits became manifestly visible in the character of Masnad-i-‘Alī Saiyyid Khizr Khān.

Verse.

The Saiyyid was a man in whom were manifested
The virtues of Muḥammad, and the grace of ‘Alī the accepted.

The following is an epitome of the career of Malik Marwān Daulat. He was governor of Multān in the time of Firūz Shāh, and after the death of Malik Marwān Daulat, the Government of that district devolved upon his son Malik Shāikh, shortly after whose death it was confirmed to Malik Suleimān. He also bade farewell to this world in that reign, and the country of Multān with its dependencies was conferred upon Saiyyid Khizr Khān on behalf of Sultān Firūz Shāh, up to the date when the aforesaid Saiyyid was advanced to the Sultānate by the Amirs. He however would not assume the title of King; but received the title of Rāyāt-i-A‘ala.¹

On the date mentioned he alighted at the palace of Sultān Maḥmūd, and gained over the hearts of great and small by public largesse and unbounded favours, distributing titles, offices, and territories among his personal attendants; in the very first year of his accession he conferred upon Malik Naḥv² (Tuḥfa) the title of Tāju-l-Mulk, and appointed him with a considerable following to the command of the eastern districts of Hindūstān; he accordingly crossed the river Ganges at the ford of Pirāhā,¹ and entered the country of Kaithar. Rāi Har Singh and the rebels of that district sought refuge in the forests of that country² and lay hid there. Then he gave over Kaithar to rapine and plunder, whereupon Mahābat Khān Hākim' of Badāon also came in and had an interview with him, and Rāi Har Singh being reduced to extremities submitted to him, agreeing to the conditions imposed of the payment of tribute and of a yearly offering. Tāju-l-Mulk and Mahābat Khān, seized the banks of the river Rāhab, and on arriving at the ford of Sargdawāri crossed the Ganges, chastised the infidels of Kahwar (which is now known by the name of Shamsābād)³ Kanpila and Baitāli, and passing by the towns of Sakina⁴ and Pādham came to Rāpari;⁵ and Hasan Khān and Malik Hanra his brother, who held the government of Rāpari, and Rāi Sar the governor of Chandawār, together with the infidels of Gwālār all came and joined hands with him, agreeing to pay tribute, and voluntarily assuming the yoke of obedience. From thence Malik Tāju-l-Mulk came to the township of Jālesar,⁶ which he wrested from the grasp of the infidels of Chandawār, and restored as of old to the control of the Muslims who had held it in days of yore, and gave fresh currency to the Muḥam-madan religion. Then having appointed his own agents and having seized the right bank of the Black water, ¹ inflicted condign punishment upon the infidels of Etāwah, and then returned towards the city.

And in the year 818 H. (1415 A.D.) he gave to Saiyyid Khizr Khān the younger son ² of Malik Mubārak, whose countenance betokened royal dignity, the territory of Firūzpūr and Sihriṇḍ, together with the whole of the districts which were in the possession of Bairam Khān Turkbacha, and subjected the supreme control and administration of that tract of country to his will and pleasure, while Malik Sadhū Nādir, ³ having assumed the control of the western portion of Hindūstān, was appointed to this office with the rank of Naib-i-Shāhzāda (i.e., vicergerent of the Prince).

And in the aforesaid year the Prince here alluded to having, in concert with Malik ⁴ Sadhū Nādira and Zīrak Khān the Amīr of Sāmāna and other Amīrs and Maliks, ⁵ set in order the important affairs of that province, and put everything upon a satisfactory footing, returned to Dihli his capital city.

And in the year 819 H. (1416 A.D.) he appointed Malik Tāju-l-Mulk ⁶ with a large army to carry the standards of Khizr Khān ⁷ towards Baiāna and Gwālīār; Malik Karīmu-l-Mulk, the brother of Shams Khān Auhādī came and had an interview with him.

287. Having cleared those regions of the thorns of infidelity he returned; and in this selfsame year some of the Turkbachas of Bairam Khān's party seized by treachery Malik Sadhū Nādira, who was holding the district of Sihriṇḍ as the Shahzāda's deputy, raised him to the dignity of martyrdom, and took possession of Sihriṇḍ. Khizr Khān thereupon sent Zīrak Khān to put down this rebellion, and he accordingly went thence to the foot of the hills in pursuit of those rebels, but after encountering many difficulties he returned.

In this year also Sultān Aḥmad, who was the ruler of Gujerāt, laid seige to Nāgor,¹ but upon hearing of the march of Khizr Khān abandoned the siege and withdrew. Khizr Khān came to Chhāin,² and Alyās Khān the governor of Chhāin gave in his allegiance to him. Thence he proceeded to Gwālīār, and although he did not reduce that fortress, still he levied tribute and offerings from it, and thence came to Baiāna where Shams Khān Auhadi gave in his submission. And in the year 820 H. (1417 A.D.) Tūghān the Ra'is with his band who had been the murderers of Malik Sadhū revolted. Zirak Khān was again appointed (to chastise them), and scattered that gathering in all directions.

And in the year 821 H. (1418 A.D.) Khizr Khān went up against Kaithar, and Har Singh Dev, who has already been mentioned, laid waste the whole of Kaithar, and took to the forest of Ānwla, the circumference of which is twenty-four krohs. After several engagements he was defeated, and eventually withdrew to the hill country of Kumāon. Tāju-l-Mulk crossed the river Rahab and pursued him as far as the hills, and from there came to Badāon, and taking with him Mahābat Khān, the governor of Badāon, crossed the Ganges by the crossing of Bajlāna: then having dismissed Mahābat Khān, he himself went on to Itāwa, whence he returned to Dilli laden with spoil. In this same year, also, Khizr Khān³ again led an army against Kaithar, and proceeding by way of Kol arrived at Baitālī, where he crossed the Ganges and came to Badāon. On this occasion Mahābat

¹ Nāgor. In Brigg's translation of Firishṭa this appears as Nagore (I. 509). It is Nagaur in Jodhpur State, Rajputānā 48 miles North-West of Nasirābād and 75 North-East of Jodhpūr city.

Khān Badāoni being afraid of him, shut himself up in the fortress, and opposed Khizr Khān for a space of six months; he was on the point of being defeated, when Qiwām Khān and Ikhtiyār Khān, and certain of the other Mahmūd Shāhi Amīrs who had seceded from Daulat Khān and had espoused the cause of Khizr Khān, meditated treason against Khizr Khān: but Khizr Khān becoming aware of this state of things¹ abandoned (the siege of) Badāon, and returned to Dihli. And in the year 822 H. (1419 A.D.) he put those traitor Amīrs to death on the banks of the Ganges, in vengeance for the treachery of which they had been guilty. In the same year also an obscure person on the confines of Bajwāra,² falsely gave himself out to be Sārang Khān who had been killed some time before, and upon his assuming this name several adventurers flocked to him. Khizr Khān deputed Sultān Shāh Lodi³ to proceed against him. They fought a fierce battle in the neighbourhood of Sihriind, and Sārang Khān the impostor fled and took to the mountains. Sultān Shāh made Rūpar his head quarters.⁴ In this same year Khizr Khān sent Tāju-l-Mulk to Itāwa. Rāi Sipar was holding out in that fort, but sought for quarter, and consented to pay revenue to Tāju-l-Mulk.⁵ Thence he came to Chandwār, and having laid it waste and pillaged it, proceeded by way of Kaithar to Dihli. In this same year Malik Tāju-d-Dīn died, and the duties of his Vazīrship were entrusted to his elder son Malik Sikandar. Tughān Rāi again raised an insurrection in Sihriind, and Malik Khairu-d-Dīn was appointed to oppose him, and returned after having satisfactorily quelled his rebellion.

³ Firishta adds, "called Islām Khān who was the governor of Sarhind."

⁴ This appears to be the meaning of the text. Firishta tells us that Islām Khān pursued "Sārang Khān" with his own forces and those of certain other Maliks, but returned upon finding that he had hidden himself.

⁵ MS. (A) مال واجبی. Firishta calls him Rāi Samir.

And in the year 824 H. (1421 A.D.) Khizr Khān proceeded to 289. Miwāt and took Kotla; thence he hastened to Gwālār; from the Rāi of which place he levied considerable sums and returned to Itāwa. Rāi Sipar had gone to hell, and ¹ his son had tendered his submission. In this interval ² a severe illness attacked Khizr Khān which led to his return towards Dihli. Having arrived at that city on the seventeenth of Jumādīu-l-Awwal in the above year, he was received into the mercy of God and passed away from the world.

In accordance with his rights as heir-presumptive ascended the throne with the consent of the Amirs in the year 824 H. (1421 A.D.)⁴ and became firmly settled in the administration of his kingdom. In this year Jasrat Khūkar⁵ the son of Shaikhā Khūkar raised a rebellion, the reason of which was that he had taken unawares Sultān 'Alī the king of Kashmīr, who had started with the intention of conquering Tatta⁶ and had defeated him in one of the mountain passes,⁷ a vast amount of plunder falling into his hands. Emboldened by this victory, he used the royal treasures which he had obtained to further an attempt to seize the kingdom of Dihli, and having crossed the rivers Biāh and Sutlej with a

Jasrat descended the bank of the river Sarsuti whereupon the question of peace arose; Jasrat by some treachery made Zīrak Khān prisoner. Sultān Mubārak Shāh moved towards Sihhind, upon hearing which Jasrat Shaikhā⁵ released Zīrak Khān who went to Sāmāna and offered his services to Mubārak Shāh who proceeded to Ludhiāna. Jasrat having crossed the Ludhiāna river drew up to oppose him, being in possession of the whole of the boats. The army of Mubārak Shāh was unable to cross the river, until after the rising of Canopus⁶ when the river became fordable. The Sultān then crossed the river; Jasrat fled and having

¹ We must read تلوندي کمال الدين. This is shewn to be the right reading by the collateral passage in Firishṭa which reads (I, p. 297), "و تلوندي که برای کمال تعلق داشت غارت کرد" and laid waste Talaundi which belonged to Rāi Kamāl."

² The text and both MSS. read کداهنه Kudāhna, but it is evident that we should read کدھيانه Ludhiāna. We find in Firishṭa (loc. cit.). "و حبرت بلود پانه آسمه." "Jasrat having come to Lūdiāna." Talaundi I cannot identify, but there is a place on the North bank of the Sutlej in Rennell's map, called Tulloom, this with the affixed genitive feminine termination (Panjābī) dī, would give Tulūmdī or Tulūndī, i. e., the village of Tulūm. Tulloom lies about 20 miles S. S.-W. of Ludhiāna (see Rennell's map, Tieff. III), on the opposite bank of the river.

³ Rūpar in Rennell's map is placed North-East of Ludhiāna about 50 miles distant: but on modern maps it is shewn almost due East of Ludhiāna and about 35 miles from it.

The troops of Mubārak Khān followed him and the greater part of his infantry and cavalry were killed, and all his wealth and treasure was plundered and lost. Rāi Bhīm³ the chief of Jammoo offered his services to Mubārak Shāh and guided his army.⁴ Mubārak Shāh returned thence to Lāhor.

And in the year 825 H. (A.D. 1421) he remained encamped on the bank of the river Rāvi for nearly a month, rebuilt the city of Lāhor which had been laid in ruins during the late invasion, and completely repaired the citadel where it had been breached and levelled;⁵ then having left there Malik Maḥmūd Hasan who bore the title of Maliku-sh-Sharq, returned to Dihli. Five months later Jasrat Khūkar again came against Lāhor with a large army and encamped at the abode of Shaikh-i-Mashāikh Shaikh Hasan Zinjāni,⁶ may God sanctify him, and every day for a month made repeated efforts to take the city by assault, but eventually failing to attain his object⁷ withdrew to Kalānor⁸ and fought a battle with Rāi Bhīm, and when both sides were in the midst of the fight they agreed to make peace.

In the year 826 H. (1422 A.D.) Mubārak Shāh proceeded to Kaithar, and Mahābat Khān of Badāon who had revolted against Khizr Khān came in and submitted himself, and was distinguished by special marks of favour. Leaving there ² he crossed the Ganges and attacked the country of the Panwārs ³ in the neighbourhood of Khor otherwise known as Shamsābād,⁴ and having put the majority of them to the sword ravaged the country; then having left Malik Mubāriz and Zīrak Khān and Kamāl Khān with a large force in the fortress of Kanpila to quell the insurrection of the rebels he returned to Dihli.

and that Jasrat withdrew, crossed the Chhināb and Rāvi, and took refuge in the hills.

¹ This is the reading of the text. Talwāra is possibly the same as Talhar mentioned above. Dr. Stein, whom I have consulted, considers that Talwāra in the text refers to the village Talwāra on the right bank of the Chināb just opposite to the town of Rīāsi (74° 52' Long. 33° 6' Lat.). This is, he says, a common place for crossing the Chināb as the route connecting Ponī with Rīāsi and Jammu is shown on the survey map (Atlas of India, Sheet 29), as passing Talwāra. Dr. Stein cannot ascertain whether the hill range rising to the north of Talwāra is designated by that name. Pūhī in the text is probably identical with Ponī. The reading of MS. (A) is در کوتله رفت went to Kotla.

² Firishṭa tells us that Malābat Khān in obedience to the orders of the Sulṭān crossed the Ganges and invaded the territories of the Rāthor tribe.

Mubārak Shāh left that place and marched towards Gwālār, but Alp Khān proceeding along the banks of the Chambal river³ would not permit the army of Mubārak Shāh to cross: however the soldiers of Mubārak Shāh crossed by another ford, scattered the forces of Alp Khān, and returned triumphant. This engagement led to a peaceful settlement, and Alp Khān sent in many presents and returned towards Dhār, while Mubārak Shāh proceeded to Dihli. 292.

And in the year 827 H. (1423 A.D.) he again ordered an expedition towards the hills of Kumāon and Kaithar, on returning whence he laid waste Miwāt. In this year a severe famine occurred throughout the whole of Hindūstān. In the year 829 H. he again proceeded towards Miwāt and reduced the fortresses of Indor and Alwar.

³ Firišta writes of this: And Sulṭān Hoshang seized the fords of the Chhanbal river and opposed his progress, but Mubārak Shāh discovered another ford and crossed rapidly; and certain of the Amīrs of the advance guard of the Dihli forces pillaged the camp of the Sulṭān of Mālwa and took many prisoners, but inasmuch as these were Muslims Mubārak Shāh set them free.

Sulṭān Hoshang sued for peace sending in suitable offerings, and withdrew towards Dhār. Mubārak Shāh halted on the banks of the Chhanbal levying taxes on the old scale from the landholders of that district, and eventually arrived at Dihli in the month of Rajab 827 H.

The Chambal or Chhanbal river is a river of Central India and one of the principal tributaries of the Jamna, it rises in Mālwa; about eight or nine miles south-west of Mhow it is joined by the Kali-Siad, Parbati and Banas, flows past Dholpūr into Etāwah and joins the Jamna 40 miles below Etāwah town. And in the year 830 H. he took Baiāna from Muḥammad Khān Auhādī, and sent the family of Auhādī to the palace known as Jahān Numā,¹ and assigned it to them as a residence. He then gave Baiāna to Malik Muqbil Khān one of his retainers, and Sikri to Malik Khairu-d-Din Tuḥfa, while he himself led an army against Gwālīar receiving the submission of the Rāis of that district.

And in the year 831 H. (1427 A.D.) ambassadors arrived in Dihli from Qādir Khān, governor of Kālpi, bringing tidings that Sharqī² was besieging him. Mubārak Shāh marched to oppose Sharqī; but in the meantime tidings arrived that Sharqī had attacked Bhūngāon³ and was encamped there, intending to proceed to Badāon.⁴ Mubārak Shāh, who had crossed the river Jamna at the ford of Nūh Patal, and had attacked Jartauli,⁵ on arrival at the township of Atrauli⁶ received intelligence that Mukhtaṣṣ Khān⁷ the brother of Sharqī had arrived on the borders of Itāwa with an army and many elephants; Mubārak Shāh detailed Maliku-sh-Sharq Mahmūd Ḥasan with ten thousand cavalry to oppose Mukhtaṣṣ Khān. Mukhtaṣṣ Khān joined hands with Sharqī who proceeded along the banks of the Black-Water, otherwise known as the Kālīnī,⁸ and arrived in the vicinity of the township of Burhānābād one of the dependencies of Itāwa. Mubārak Shāh pursued him as far as Chandwār; a space of four krohs lay between the two armies so that the outposts of the forces could see each other. They remained thus confronting each other for twenty days; at last Sharqī came out in force, and from mid-day till nightfall hard fighting went on between the two armies, and the event was not decided on that day; on the following day Sharqī turned back towards his own country,² and Mubārak Shāh, considering that both sides were Muslims, no longer pursued him, but went towards Satgāna,³ and having conquered that country followed the bank of the Chanbal river and came down to Baiāna.

Muhammad Khān Anḥadī, who on account of having had an (unsatisfactory) interview with Sharqī had taken fright, and had entrenched himself in the fortress, came and sought protection in an interview with Mubārak Shāh.⁴ Mubārak Shāh thereupon retraced his steps to Dihli.

And in the year 832 H. Maliku-sh-Sharq Maḥmūd Ḥasan, who had been left in Baiāna by Mubārak Shāh as his Viceroy, and had put the affairs of that place in order, and had also chastised⁵ those infidels who had made common cause with Muhammad Khān and had raised disturbances, came to Court and received substantial favours, and the fortress of Firoza was confirmed to him. In that same year Malik Rajab Nādira, governor of Multān died, and Malik Maḥmūd Ḥasan received the title of 'Imādu-l-Mulk (Pillar of the State) and proceeded to Multān.

And in the year 833 H. (1429 A.D.) Mubārak Shāh went to Gwālīar by way of Baiāna, and having taken the Rāpri district from the son of Ḥasan Khān gave it to Malik Hamza, and returned 294.

The title of Saiyyid Khān was conferred upon one of his sons, and that of Shujā'u-l-Mulk upon the other.² And Fūlād, a Turkbacha slave, one of the servants of the aforesaid Saiyyid Sālim, raised a rebellion in Tabarhinda and took possession of the enormous wealth which had been amassed by Saiyyid Sālim. Mubārak Shāh imprisoned the sons of Saiyyid Sālim, and appointed Malik Yūsuf Sarūr and Rāi Hansū Bhatī³ to oppose him (Fūlād). Fūlād Turkbacha made a night attack upon them and scattered their forces, and much valuable booty fell into his hands. Mubārak Shāh led an army against Tabarhinda, and the Turkbacha slave was besieged there. Mubārak Shāh summoned 'Imādu-l-Mulk from Multān, and sent him with a message to the Turkbacha slave, who, after suing for quarter, came out from the fort and had an interview with 'Imādu-l-Mulk, but did not rely upon his assurances, and returned in alarm to the fort and continued to fight. Mubārak Shāh permitted 'Imādu-l-Mulk to proceed to Multān and himself returned to Dihli. The slave (Fūlād) continued to engage in battle at intervals with the troops of Mubārak Shāh during the six months during which he was absent. At last he sent considerable sums of money⁴ by way of presents to Shaikh 'Alī Mughul who was the ruler of Kābul. Shaikh 'Alī accordingly came to his assistance from Kābul with a vast army, which was reinforced by a large number of men from the borders of the Panjāb. He removed the slave Maliku-sh-Sharq Malik Sikander, governor of Lāhor, who used to pay a yearly tribute to Shaiikh 'Ali, discharged his obligation and induced him to turn his attentions elsewhere. Accordingly Shaiikh 'Ali passing by Lāhor without sacking it¹ made towards Depālpūr, and 'Imādu-l-Mulk came out from Multān to oppose him. Shaiikh 'Ali taking the bank of the river Rāvi, proceeded to within a short distance of Tulumba,² and turning aside from thence came to Khūṭṭpūr.³ ('Imādu-l-Mulk) fought with Shaiikh 'Ali but was defeated, and Malik Suleiman Shāh Lodi, who was with the advance guard of the army of 'Imādu-l-Mulk, fell in this battle;⁴ [and Shaiikh 'Ali came to Khusrūābād and for a long time daily engagements were fought between him and 'Imādu-l-Mulk].⁵ 295.

Shaiikh 'Ali was not able to stand against them,⁶ so changed front, and retired under cover of night into an entrenchment which he had thrown up around his position; when they surrounded his entrenchment he retreated towards Jhīlam, and having crossed the river there lost the greater part of his men by drowning, some were killed and some taken prisoners.⁷ Shaiikh 'Ali and Amīr Muzaḥfar proceeded with a certain number of men to the town of Shiwar;⁸ all their baggage and property having been taken, the army of 'Imādu-l-Mulk pursued them up to that point. Amir Muẓaffar remained entrenched within the fortress while Shaiḡh 'Alī set his face to go to Kābul. The victorious army abandoned the siege and returned to Dihli. Multān was taken away from 'Imādu-l-Mulk and given to Malik Khairu-d-Dīn Khān which led to great disturbances on the borders of Multān.

And in the year 835 H. (1431 A.D.) Malik Sikander,¹ governor of Lāhor, set out to quell the rebellion which Jasrat Khūkhār had stirred up at the foot of the hills. Jasrat took him² unawares and engaged him in battle; Sikander falling into the hands of Jasrat Khūkhār was taken prisoner near Jālandhar. Jasrat took his prisoner to Lāhor and besieged the city, and Saiyyid Najmu-d-Dīn the regent of Sikander, and Malik Khushkhabr³ the slave of Sikander, fought several battles with him. In the meantime Shaiḡh 'Alī collected an army and again came on to the borders of Multān,⁴ and assaulted Khūtpūr,⁵ taking prisoners the greater portion of the inhabitants of Jhīlam and its vicinity, and seized Tulumba, pillaging and despoiling all the inhabitants and making them prisoners; most of them he put to death, and took the rest of them, great and small, to his own country.

In the meantime Fūlād Turkbacha, who has been mentioned above, left Tabarhinda and invaded the territory of Rāi Fīroz⁶ who engaged him in battle and was slain, Fūlād sending his head to Tabarhinda.

In this year also the Sultān again led an army towards Lāhor and Multān; when he arrived in the vicinity of Sāmāna, Jasrat withdrew from in front of Lāhor towards the foot of the hills, and Shaiḡh 'Alī also retired to his own country. Lāhor and Jālandhar were taken from Shamsu-l-Mulk and given to Nuṣrat Khān Gurgandāz, and Mubārak Shāh gave orders for the family and relations of Shamsu-l-Mulk to be removed⁷ from Lāhor to Dihli, whither he himself returned.

And in the year 836 H. (1433 A.D.) Mubārak Shāh once more hastened to Sāmāna¹ to put down the rebellion of Jasrat; when he arrived at Panipath he received intelligence of the death of his mother, who was called Makhdūma-i-Jahān (Mistress of the world), and turned back with a small retinue² to Dihli, and having remained there ten days to perform his mourning for her, again joined his army, and detailed Yūsuf Surūr-i-Mulk to proceed to Tabarkhinda to put down the insurrection of Fūlād. Mubārak Shāh after taking Lāhor and Jālandhar from Nuṣrat Khān gave them to Malik Allahdād Kālū Lodī. When³ he arrived near Jālandhar, Jasrat, having crossed the river Biāh, had engaged Allahdād Kālū⁴ at Bajwāra,⁵ and had defeated him. 297. Malik Allahdād had fled to the hill-country.

In this year the Sultān brought an army into Miwāt against Jalāl Khān, and from thence despatching a force to operate towards Gwālār and Itāwa, returned (to Dihli). In this same year Shaikh 'Alī coming down into the Panjāb again caused disturbances there. Mubārak Shāh accordingly nominated 'Imādu-l-mulk to reinforce the Amīrs of that district. Shaikh 'Alī invaded the country from Shiwar to the banks of the Biāh, and taking great numbers prisoners and plundering, went to Lāhor. Zirak Khān and the other Amīrs⁶ who were in Lāhor fortified themselves there, and fought repeated engagements with him, till, one night, the inhabitants of Lāhor were careless about their guards and sentries, and Malik Yūsuf Surūr-i-Mulk and Malik Isma'īl under cover of night succeeded in joining Zirak Khān; then sallying from the fort,⁷ gave battle and were defeated. remained there. And after some days, he came to Debālpūr, which Malik Yūsuf Surūru-l-Mulk was intending to abandon. Malik 'Imādu-l-Mulk¹ on hearing of this despatched his brother Malik Aḥmad from Tabarhinda to the fort of Debālpūr with orders to hold it. Shaiḫ 'Alī becoming aware of this returned from that direction: Sultān Mubārak Shāh proceeded as far as Sāmāna in order to quell these disturbances.² From Sāmāna he proceeded to Talaundi and thence to the ford of Pūhī, where he crossed the the Biāh and came to Debālpūr. Thence he marched along the banks³ of the Rāvi, and Shaiḫ 'Alī crossed the Jhilam and fled,⁴ Mubārak Shāh pursued him as far as the fortress of Shīwar and crossed the Rāvi near Tulumba.⁵ Amīr Muẓaffar 298. Khān, brother's son to Shaiḫ 'Alī, who was holding the fort with Shaiḫ 'Alī's troops, fought against the king for a month, and at last sued for quarter, and gave his daughter together with a large amount of money and valuables to the prince. A part of Shaiḫ 'Alī's forces who were besieged in Lāhor sought quarter from Shamsu-l-Mulk and evacuated the fort. As soon as Mubārak Shāh had completed the affair of Shīwar and the conquest of Lāhor, he proceeded with a small retinue to visit the holy shrines of the Shaiḫs at Multān, and returning almost immediately came to Debālpūr and remained there for some days. Having regard to Shaiḫ 'Alī (as a source of danger), he gave the districts of Lāhor and Debālpūr to Maliku-sh-Sharq 'Imādu-l-Mulk, and taking away the districts of Baiāna from 'Imādu-l-Mulk he gave them to Shamsu-d-dīn. There was a hypocritical bond of fellowship between these two,² inasmuch as Sarwaru-l-Mulk had a grievous thorn ranking in his breast on account of the deprivation of Debālpūr, and bore a grudge against Mubārak Shāh: so that at such a juncture, seeing that he had less than ever to hope from him, he entered on a course of secret treachery and deceit. He entered into a conspiracy with the sons of Kāngū Khatri and Kajwi Khatri and Mirān Šadr Naib-i-'Arz, (who for generations had been protégés of the Mubārak Shāhi family, and held several high offices) and also with another party of Muslim vagabonds, to seek an opportunity of destroying Mubārak Shāh.³

And in the year 837 H. (1433 A.D.)⁴ Mubārak Shāh built a city on the banks of the river Jamna,⁵ and gave it the name of Mubārakābād (City of Prosperity), though in reality it should have been called Kharābābād (City of Ruin), and was so zealous in building it that he spared no pains in its superintendence. In the meanwhile news of the capture of the fortress of Tabarhinda reached the court, accompanied by the head of the slave Fūlād Turkbacha.⁶ Mubārak Shāh could not contain himself for joy at this intelligence, and proceeded by forced marches to Tabarhinda⁷ and returned thence speedily to Mubārakābād. ⁵ Briggs in his translation of Firihṭa (Vol. I, p. 529) assigns 839 H. as the date of the building of this city, but a reference to the original shews that the historian gives 837 H. as the date.

⁶ The text reads here بافولاد غلام but a footnote gives a variant مرفولاد and this reading is confirmed by MS. (A) and also by Firihṭa.

ceived the title of Hoshang.¹ Mubārak Shāh accordingly sent commands in all directions for forces to be collected and held in readiness to march towards Kālpī, and that they should assemble at the Court. At this juncture Mubārak Shāh persisted in his invariable custom of visiting the site of the new city in season and out of season. One day when he had ridden out there with a body of attendants without ceremony, and was preparing to say the Friday prayers,² the infidels under Mirān Šadr, who had continually lain in wait for him at the instigation of Sarwaru-l-Mulk, seeking an opportunity (to slay him),³ with one accord entered the private apartment of Mubārak Shāh on some pretext or another, and Sidh Pāl,⁴ the grandson of the scoundrel Kajwi Khatri, put that auspicious monarch to a martyr's death. This event took place in the year 837 H. The days of his reign were thirteen years three months and sixteen days.

⁵ دجله Dajla or Dagla, as it may also be pronounced, is the Hiddekel of the Bible (Gen. ii. 14; Dan. x. 4) ܕܝܓܠܝܬܐ lit., the swift. The old Persian form is Tigrā, "swift as an arrow," whence is derived Tigris, the modern name of this river. According to Pliny (VI. 27), the river in the upper part of its course where it flowed gently was called Diglito, and lower down, where it is more rapid, on account of its velocity it is called Tigris, for the Medes call an arrow by this name. According to Gesenius, in modern Persian both the river Tigris and an arrow have the common name تیر tīr, which in the Zend becomes Tedjer. See Gesenius Thes: also Smith Dict. G. E. Geog.

"The Tigris is navigable for light steamers up to Baghdād, but owing to the rapidity of the current, the traffic is all down stream carried on mainly by a primitive style of craft, which is broken up at Baghdād and transported by camels back to Mosul."

SULTĀN MUḤAMMAD SHĀH IBN I FARĪD KHĀN,

The brother's son of Mubārak Shāh ibn i Khizr Khān, whom Mubārak Shāh had adopted as his own son, ascended the throne in succession to Mubārak Shāh in the year¹ 837 H. (1433 A.D.) and Sarwaru-l-Mulk, whose head was filled with treacherous designs, ostensibly owned his allegiance. Muḥammad Shāh, in spite of the foregoing circumstances, conferred upon him the title of Khān-i-Jahān and bestowed a khil'at upon him, he also appointed Mirān Šadr Mu'īnu-l-mulk, and for a short time winked at the doings of those infidels. Maliku-gh-Sharq Kamālu-l-mulk, who was co-partner with Sarwaru-l-Mulk in the vazirship, elected to reside outside the city, and gave in his allegiance to Muḥammad Shāh. The second day after the accession Sarwaru-l-Mulk made some pretext for arresting² certain of the servants of Mubārak Shāh, and put them to death, and left nothing undone to secure the overthrow of the family of Mubārak Shāh; moreover, he began to divide the country among his own partisans, giving the territory of Baiāna, and Amroha, and Nārnol, and Kuhrām, together with certain districts in the Doāb, to Sidh Pāl and Sidhāran Khatri who were the (actual) murderers of Mubārak Shāh. Rānūn the Black, a slave of Sidh Pāl, arrived in Baiāna with a large following, and attempted to enter the fort; but in the meantime Yūsuf Khān Aḥādī arrived from Hindwān,³ and giving him battle defeated him, and sent the greater portion of those infidels to hell. Their women and children fell as prisoners into the hands of the Muslims, and the head of Rānūn the Black was hung up over the gate of the fort. Inasmuch as Sarwaru-l-Mulk and his infidel horde began to commit violence, the Amirs of Khizr Khān and Mubārak Shāh, who were scattered here and there about the country, in several places shewed symptoms of revolt and set on foot many insurrections. Sarwaru-l-Mulk had the self-same object, namely to damage the kingdom. 301. Malik Allahdād Kāla Lodi, governor of Sambhal and Abār,⁴ and Malik Chaman¹ governor² of Badāon, grandson of Khān-i-Juhān, and Amir 'Alī Gujrātī, together with some other Amirs, raised a large following to avenge the death of Mubārak Shāh, and started towards Dihlī. Maliku-sh-Sharq, Kamālu-l-Mulk, and Saiyyid Khān, son of Saiyyid Sālim, who had received the title of Khān-i-'Azam from Mubārak Shāh, were appointed by the durbār to proceed against those Amirs, and Malik Yūsuf, the son of Sarwaru-l-Mulk, together with Sidhāran and Kāngū were ordered to accompany Kamālu-l-Mulk. The Dihlī army crossed by the ford of Kicha and came to Baran (Balandshahr). Malik Allahdād and the other noted Amirs having arrived at the township of Ahār desired to cross the Ganges without fighting and go where they could safely. But when they saw clearly that Malik Kamālu-l-Mulk was heartily bent upon taking vengeance upon Sarwaru-l-Mulk, they took courage and did not leave their positions. Sarwaru-l-Mulk becoming aware of this sent his lieutenant Malik Hushyār, under pretence of reinforcing Kamālu-l-Mulk, as a spy into their army. Yūsuf Khān and Malik Hushyār, and Sidhāran the infidel, entertaining suspicions regarding Kamālu-l-Mulk left the army and went to Dihlī: and the Amirs of Sambhal and Badāon joined Kamālu-l-Mulk and came in great force to the ford of Kicha. Sarwaru-l-Mulk was engaged in strengthening his fort. The following day the loyal Amirs having crossed the Jamna encamped in the Bāgh-i-Jūd³ while the traitors and infidels sallied out from the fort and engaged them in battle, but suffered defeat in the very first onset and retreated to the fort, but before they could enter it a large number were put to death and most of the remainder were taken prisoners.

302. The day following this victory the Mubārak Shāhī Amirs encamped near the fort of Sirī, and the greater part of the Amirs who were inside the fort, came out and joined them. Fighting went on between the two parties for three months.

At the latter part of this year Zīrak Khān, Governor of Sāmāna died, and the country was confirmed to his son Muḥammad Khān. Muḥammad Shāh, although outwardly he held friendly relations with Sarwaru-l-Mulk, still in his inmost heart was in unison with his father's Amirs. Sarwaru-l-Mulk became aware of this, and accordingly began to plot treachery against him also, and was only waiting his opportunity.

On the eighth of Muḥarram in the year 838 H. (1434 A.D.) Sarwaru-l-Mulk and the sons of the perfidious Mirān Ṣadr suddenly broke into the tent of the king with the intention of doing him a grievous injury, but at this moment Muḥammad Shāh became aware of their design; and with all despatch sent messengers to Kamālu-l-Mulk, while the attendants who were near the person of Muḥammad Shāh were on their guard, and killed the traitor Sarwaru-l-Mulk, and seizing the sons of Mirān Ṣadr executed them in presence of the darbār. The traitorous infidels blockaded themselves in their own houses. Kamālu-l-Mulk, accompanied by all the Amirs, entered the fort by the Darwāza-i-Baghdād (Baghdād gate). The ruffian Sidh Pāl set fire to his house and property, and after performing the *jauhar*¹ which is a well-known custom expressed by that word in the Hindī language, went himself into battle and became food for the flames of the pitiless sword,² and his impure soul went to hell.³ Sidhāran Kāngū and the rest of the Khatri confederation, were one and all taken prisoners, and were impaled near the *ḥazira*⁴ (mausoleum)

¹ جوهر Jauhar or Jāhar ज़हर is a Hindī word derived from the words जीव jīva, and हार hara signifying taking one's own life. The custom of the Rājputs when reduced to the last extremity in warfare was in olden times to perform a rite of self-sacrifice known by this name: as for instance on the occasion of the siege and capture of Chitor by Sulṭān 'Alāu d-Dīn: "Huge piles of timber were raised up and set on fire. The women approached in funeral procession and threw themselves into the flames. The men arrayed themselves in saffron-coloured garments and rushed out of the fortress sword in hand; most of them were cut to pieces." The evident object of the rite was to protect the persons of the women from the indignities to which they would be submitted if they were to fall alive into the hands of the enemy.

³ The word جوهر Jauhar, here used for "Soul," has the primary meaning of "essence." It is a Persian word and is used here as a play upon the Hindī word jauhar used above (Note 1).

303. of Mubārak Shāh, and Malik Hushyār and Mubārak Kotwāl were executed along with them. The following day Kamālū-l-Mulk and the other noted Amirs renewed their fealty to Muḥammad Shāh; Kamālū-l-Mulk obtained the rank of vazīr and Malik Chaman of Badāon received the title of Ghāzi-l-Mulk, and was reinstated in his former position as governor of Badāon, Amroha being also added to his province; Malik Allahdād Lodi would not accept any title, the title of Daryā Khān however he accepted for his brother. Thus after settling the important affairs, Muḥammad Shāh gave durability to his rule, and conducted his Government in tranquillity.

And in the year 840 H. (1436 A.D.) he turned his attention towards Multān, and halted for some days at Mubārakpūr to give time for the Amirs of the various districts to join him. When the Muḥammad Shāh's troops were all assembled at Mubārakpūr he marched thence towards Multān, and after visiting the shrines of the holy men at that place¹ came to Dihli. And in the aforesaid year, marching towards Sāmāna he despatched a force to proceed against Shaiḫā Knūkhar.² Accordingly they laid waste his country and returned.³ In the year 841 H. (1437 A.D.) tidings arrived that the tribe of Langāhs had raised an insurrection in Multān, and in the meantime Sultān Ibrahim Sharqī obtained possession of certain divisions of Dihli, and the Rāi of Gwālīār and the other Rāis refused to pay the customary tribute. Muḥammad Shāh affected to be indifferent to this, and disturbances sprung up in all directions, and everyone was hankering after something. The Khānzādas of Miwāt, who are the ancestors of Ḥasan Khān of Miwāt, invited Sultān Maḥmūd Khilji from Mālwa to assume the imperial power of Dihli.

304. And in the year 844 H. (1440 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd arrived at Dihli, and Muḥammad Shāh drew up his forces and sent out his son Saiyyid 'Alāu-d-Din to engage him in battle, giving the command of the force to Malik Buhlūl Lodi. Sultān Maḥmūd also appointed his two sons Ghiāsu-d-Dīn and Qadr Khān¹ to oppose them. A fierce battle resulting they at last agreed to make peace, and Sultān Maḥmūd taking advantage of that, and alleging as an excuse that he had seen in a dream that the kingdom of Multān was being ruined, marched in light order under cover of night towards Mālwa. Malik Bahlūl pursued him and seized a portion of his baggage and valuable equipment. Sultān Muḥammad was so pleased at the energy displayed by Bahlūl Lodi that he called him his son,² and bestowed upon him the country of Lāhor and Detālpūr.

And in the year 845 H. (1441 A.D.) he marched to Sāmāna, and having despatched Bahlūl to chastise Jasrat Khūkhar, returned to Dihli. Jasrat concluded a peace with Malik Bahlūl and held out to him the pleasing prospect of becoming Sultān of Dihli,³ till at last Bahlūl began to collect Afghāns from all directions and took forcible possession of a large number of parganas, then without any ostensible reason he picked a quarrel with Muḥammad Shāh and revolted against him, leading an army against Dihli. He held Sultān Muḥammad for a considerable time closely besieged, but could not accomplish his purpose, and returned without effecting anything. In the meantime Muḥammad Shāh was afflicted with a grievous disorder,⁴ and the Amirs who were at a distance of twenty krohs from Dihli revolted against him, and sending for his son 'Alāu-d-Dīn who held a jāegir in Badāun, and had left there on a hunting expedition at the foot of the hills, made him⁵ heir-apparent. And in the year 847 H.⁶ he passed away, the duration of his reign was fourteen⁷ years and some months, or thereabouts.

305. SULTĀN 'ALĀU-D-DĪN IBN I MUḤAMMAD SHĀH IBN I MUBĀRAK
SHĀH¹ IBN I KHIẒR KHĀN,

In accordance with the testamentary disposition of his father succeeded to the throne, and Malik Buhlūl with the other Amirs gave in their allegiance to him, and seeing that the indolence of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn was even greater than that of his father, a still more violent ambition to secure the throne began to work upon the excited fancy of Buhlūl.

In the year 850 H. (1445 A.D.) Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn made an excursion towards Baiāna; while on the road he heard a false rumour that the King of Jaunpūr was on his way to attack Dihli, and without attempting to ascertain its truth returned in hot haste to Dihli. In the year 851 H. (1447 A.D.) he went to where it is said that Firishṭa "makes a less venial mistake in insisting upon a twelve years' reign in spite of his own expressed figures of from "839 to 849" A. H. Briggs, pp. 332-339." This is not Firishṭa's error but is the fault of his translator. Firishṭa says clearly that Muḥammad succeeded to the throne on the very day on which Mubārak Shāh was assassinated (Bo. text, p. 309) that is, "on the 9th Rajab 837" (Bo. text, p. 308), so that while his date as regards the death of Muḥammad Shāh may be wrong, his calculation based upon the dates he gives is correct. I am not aware of any direct evidence that Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn ascended the throne in 847 H. The Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhi, if Elliott's translation (Elliott, IV, p. 86) is to be trusted, says, "Upon the death of Muḥammad Shāh the amirs and nobles assembled, and raised his son to the throne under the style of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn' and in a footnote on the same page referring to the conflict of testimony between Badā'uni and Firishṭa as to the date of Muḥammad Shāh's death, he says: "Firishṭa seems correct in making it 849," and with this opinion I am inclined to agree. The mistake appears to have arisen from accepting the date given by Briggs in his translation of Firishṭa, instead of confirming it from Firishṭa himself, who gives 17th Jamādī I 824 as the date of Khīẓr Khān's death and Mubārak Shāh's accession, and states (Bo. text 309) that Mubārak Shāh reigned thirteen years three months and sixteen days. This would bring us to 837 H. not to 839 H. Therefore, unless there is evidence to shew that 'Alāu-d-Dīn came to the throne in 847 H. we are justified in accepting Firishṭa's plain and coincident statement that Muḥammad Shāh reigned twelve years and some months, dying in 849 H.

Badāon and elected to take up his abode there, and after making preparations for remaining there¹ returned to his capital Dihli.

And in the year 852 H. (1448 A.D.) having made his two brothers-in-law Shahnu-i-Shahr (City Constable) and Mir-i-Kāe (Superintendent of Roads) he returned to Badāon. A disturbance arose between those two brothers, and at last both were put to death by the people of Dihli. Husāin Khān who was Umdatul-Mulk (a Privy Councillor), and loyal to the Sultān, but from time to time spoke the direct truth to the Sultān in connection with the administration of State affairs, had for this very reason, fallen out of favour with the Sultān, and had been deposed from his office. Hamid Khān, Vazīr-i-mamlukat, (vazīr of the State) who had fled to Dihli fearing punishment at the hands of the Sultān, and dreading an attempt upon his life,² joined with Husain Khān in inviting Matik Buhlāl and in raising him to the throne. He accordingly took advantage of the absence of the Sultān to proceed to Sirhind³ and having assumed to himself the title of Sultān read the Khutbah, and coming a second time with⁴ his whole army seized upon Dihli. Leaving his viceroy there he proceeded towards Dibālpūr, where he set about raising an army, and wrote a letter couched in hypocritical terms to Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn saying, "I am your obedient servant, and am undertaking all this marching backwards and forwards solely out of loyalty to your person." The Sultān in reply, wrote as follows: "The deceased King, Sultān Muḥammad Shāh, called you by the name of Son. There is neither fruit nor profit for me in sovereignty; living in solitary contentment at Badāon I resign the empire of Dihli⁵ to you. Sultān Buhlāl leaving Dibālpūr ascended the throne of Dihli⁶ without fighting or opposition; and Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn by the orders of Sultān Buhlūl was invested with the sovereignty of Badāon and the districts appertaining to it, towards the river Ganges as far as Khairābād and the foot of the hills, and used to read the Khutbah in his own name in those districts, till at last after some time, in the year 855 H. (1451 A.D.) he bade farewell to this world.¹ The duration of his reign was seven years and some months.

Verse.

This is the sum and total of the world's conduct.
It has never proved faithful to any man.

SULTĀN BUHLŪL [IBN I KĀLĀ]² LODĪ,

Who in the reign of Sultān Muḥammad Shāh had obtained the title of Khān-i-Khānān,³ in the year 855 H. (1451 A.D.) in concert with Ḥamid Khān Vazīr (who, after the execution of Ḥusāin Khān at the hands of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, had gained possession of the family and relations of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn in Dihlī, and had brought the key of the fortress and had given it to Sultān Buhlūl) ascended the throne of sovereignty, and by degrees contrived to secure the imprisonment of Ḥamid Khān,⁴ and in the same year proceeded to Multān to set that province in order.⁵

And in the year 856 H. (1452 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd Sharqī at the instigation of certain of the Amirs of the party of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, came with a large army and laid siege to Dihlī, ¹ According to Firishṭa 'Alāu-d-Dīn died in Badāon in the year 883 H. (1478 A.D.) having reigned in Badāon some twenty-eight years.

Badāonī's statement is wrong in this particular. In 855 H. according to Firishṭa, 'Alāu-d-Dīn retired into obscurity, leaving the kingdom of Dihlī to Buhlūl Lodī, and reigned in Badāon for twenty-eight years, dying in 883 H. (Bo. text 316.) See n. 4 page 405.

² MS. (B) omits the words in brackets.

³ MS. (A) writes خطاب خانى يافته برد.

⁴ A long account of the way in which Ḥamid Khān was taken prisoner is given by Firishṭa.

⁵ Firishṭa gives an account of the circumstances attending the birth of Buhlūl Lodī, telling us that the mother of Buhlūl Lodī, when close upon her confinement of him, was killed by the falling of her house upon her; she was taken out lifeless, and to save the child the mother was instantly submitted to the Cæsarean operation and the child removed; as it shewed signs of life it was carefully tended and grew up. (Bo. text p. 317).

and after severe fighting gained possession of it,¹ and Fath Khān Harawī² who was one of the most trusted Amīrs of Sultān Maḥmūd was killed. Sultān Maḥmūd³ not being able to bear up against this went to Jaunpūr; and the following year came into the same neighbourhood, proceeding from Jaunpūr to Itāwa, and concluded peace upon the following terms, namely, that so much of the kingdom of Dihlī as was under the sway of Mubārak Shāh should belong to Sultān Buhlūl, while that portion which was under the rule of Sultān Ibrāhīm Sharqī should revert to Sultān Maḥmūd;⁴ and having promised that after the rainy season he would give Shamsābād to Sultān Buhlūl,⁵ which was held by Jūnā Khān as the deputy of Sultān Maḥmūd, each of them went to his own country.

Sultān Buhlūl at the expiration of the appointed time marched against Shamsābād, took possession of it, and gave it to Rāi Kiran, ruler of Bhūnganw. Sultān Maḥmūd being displeased at this, proceeded again⁶ to the borders of Shamsābād and fought with Sultān Buhlūl.⁷ In the meantime Sultān Maḥmūd quitted this existence for the house of eternity, and Muḥammad Shāh, the son of Sultān Maḥmūd, was nominated to the kingdom of Jaunpūr in the room of his father, and having arranged peace upon the terms formerly agreed upon between Sultān Maḥmūd and Sultān⁸⁰

³ MS. (A) reads here ... و کشته شدن او سلطان افغانان فتح خان هروی. Sultān Maḥmūd was not able to bear the fall of Fath Khān and his being killed.

⁶ MS. (A) درآمد.

⁸ Firishta says that Bibī Rāchī, the mother of Muḥammad Shāh Sharqī

Buhlul proceeded to Jaunpur, and, inasmuch as Qutb Khān, the cousin of Sultān Buhlul had fallen a prisoner into the hands of Muḥammad Shāh,¹ Sultān Buhlul, in defiance of the existing treaty, again brought up his army against Muḥammad Shāh, who also leaving Jaunpur came to Shamsābād and took it from the Hindūs by force,² and on the borders of Rāpri confronted Sultān Buhlul. Muḥammad Shāh was defeated and retreated towards Qanauj. Sultān Buhlul pursued him.³ And in the aforesaid year Sultān Husain Sharqi, ibn-i-Sultān Maḥmūd revolted against his brother Muḥammad Shāh, and seized the throne of Jaunpur with the assistance of the Amirs, and detailed ⁴ a large army to proceed against Muḥammad Shāh, whom they finally put to death on the banks of the Ganges in the vicinity of Rāj Gar. Sultān Husain made peace with Sultān Buhlul, and sending for Qutb Khān Lodī who was still in prison, from Jaunpur, presented him with a horse and a robe of honour and sent him to Sultān Buhlul⁵ and returned from Qanauj to Jaunpur⁶.

intervened, and arranged peace upon these terms, that Muḥammad Shāh should retain his father's kingdom, while Buhlul should be in undisturbed possession of all that he already held.

² There is a rather important difference here in the account given by Firishṭa (Bo. text p. 323) who writes: "When Sultān Buhlul arrived near Dihli Shams Khātūn, the sister of Qutb Khān Lodī sent him a message, saying, "So long as Qutb Khān remains in the prison of Muḥammad Shāh Sharqi food and sleep is unlawful for thee O King." Accordingly Buhlul broke the truce, and came to Dihli, whence he returned towards Jaunpur. On his arrival at Shamsābād he took it out of the hands of Rāi Kiran, and gave it to Jūnān Khān who had arrived before him, and Muḥammad Shāh Sharqi also had come out to meet him, consequently the two Kings encamped near Sarsuti facing one another at close quarters, and engaged each other early and late." From this it appears that Shamsābād was taken by Buhlul from Rāi Kiran, whereas Badāouni makes it seem as though Muḥammad's forces re-conquered it. Firishṭa's account is undoubtedly the correct one as subsequent events show.

Sultān Buhlūl also despatched Jalāl Khān, the brother of Ḥusain Khān, whom he held in confinement as hostage for Quṭb Khān, to Sultān Ḥusain after conferring honours upon him. And after some years¹ Sultān Ḥusain coming to the borders of Chandwār, fought a battle with Sultān Buhlūl, and having concluded a peace for three years again returned to his own country. At this juncture Aḥmad Khān Jilwānī, the ruler of Baiāna read the Khutbah in the name² of Ḥusain Khān; and Sultān Ḥusain, upon the expiration of the period for which peace had been concluded, proceeded towards Dihli with 10,000 cavalry and a thousand elephants. They met near a place called Bhatwāra, and Sultān Ḥusain having agreed to peace encamped at Itāwa. Sultān Buhlūl came to Dihli. The fact of these two kings being thus within a seven days' journey is not without its ridiculous side.

And on this occasion also, owing to the exertions of Qutb Khān, Sultān Ḥusain agreed to peace, taking into his own possession the whole of the country on the further side of the Ganges;¹⁰ then relinquishing this side of the river to Sultān Buhlūl he returned. Sultān Buhlūl¹¹ seized his opportunity, and when Sultān Ḥusain marched, crossed the river Jamna and captured some baggage and other property¹² which Sultān Ḥusain, relying upon the truce, had left on the camping-ground: a certain proportion of the treasury also which was laden on elephants and horses, fell into the hands of Sultān Buhlūl, and as many as forty¹³ noted Amīrs of Sultān Ḥusain's force, were taken prisoners, among others for instance, Qāzī Samā'u-d-Dīn, entitled Qutlugh Khān the Vazīr, who was the most learned of the doctors of his time.

Sultān Bahlūl made over Qutlugh Khān in chains to Qutb Khān Lodi, and himself giving chase went as far as Shamsābād¹ in the Doāb, which was held by Sultān Husain, and seizing it, appointed commissioners² of his own over³ that country; this occurrence took place in the year 884 H. (1479 A.D.)⁴ the chronogram for that year was Nawid-i-Kharābī ('Tidings of ruin').⁵

And Sultān Husain seeing that he was being very closely pursued, determined to make a stand at Rāprī, and once more peace was agreed to between them upon the old conditions, namely, that each should rest contented with the countries of which he was in possession, and should retire. Upon the conclusion of this peace Sultān Husain remained at Rāprī, and Sultān Bahlūl at a place called Dhopāmaū'; and after a time Sultān Husain again collecting an army came up against Sultān Bahlūl, and a fierce engagement took place in the vicinity of Sonhār.⁶ Sultān Husain again suffered defeat, a great deal of treasure and valuables beyond computation falling into the hands of the Lodi party, and was a means of increasing their influence and power. Sultān Bahlūl left Dhopāmaū' for Dihli to mourn⁷ for Khān-i-Jahān who had died in Dihli, [and having conferred the title of Khān-i-Jahān upon his son, again returned to attack Sultān Husain, and reaching Rāprī fought a battle in which he gained a victory];⁸ and when Sultān Husain took refuge in flight a number of his family and

In the meantime Rāi Tilūk⁴ Chand, the Governor of the country of Baksar,⁵ came and offered his services to Sultān Ḥusain,⁶ and enabled him to cross the Ganges at a place which was fordable. Sultān Ḥusain leaving Jaunpūr went by way of Banruch towards Qanauj, and engaged¹ Sultān Buhlūl for some time on the banks of the Rahab, and met with the defeat which had become a second nature to him. On this occasion his whole retinue and regalia fell into the hands of the Lodis, while his chief wife Malika-i-Jahān, Bibi Khūnzā,² who was the daughter of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and the grand daughter of Khizr Khān, was taken prisoner;³ Sultān Buhlūl treated that lady with the utmost respect and regard, and when he again attempted to conquer Jaunpūr, Bibi Khūnzā by some artifice effected her escape and joined her husband. Jaunpūr fell into the hands⁴ of Sultān Buhlūl. He gave it to Mubārak Khān Lūhānī, and himself proceeded to Badāon. Sultān Ḥusain took the opportunity to march against Jaunpūr in full force: the Amīrs of Sultān Buhlūl evacuated it, and went to Quṭb Khān Lodī who was in Mahjauli,⁵ and approached Sultān Ḥusain with expressions of fealty, and by pretending to take his part kept him at bay till reinforcements arrived from Sultān Buhlūl. Sultān Buhlūl sent his own son Mubārak Shāh to the assistance of these Amīrs, while he himself also set out⁶ for Jaunpūr, following his son; Sultān Ḥusain not being able to stand against him went to Bihār. In the meantime tidings of the death of Quṭb Khān reached Sultān Buhlūl at the camp of Haldī,⁷ and having performed the requirements of mourning for him, he proceeded to Jaunpūr, and after placing his son Barbak Shāh upon the throne of the Sharqī dynasty,⁸ returned, and came to the Kālpi country, which he gave to A'zam Humāyūn, another nephew, who had the

Later on we read that "he died near Bhandānī one of the dependencies of Sakit." Sakit is in the Etah District of the N.-W. Provinces, and it is here according to Hunter (*Imp. Abūl Faẓl states (Āin-i-Akbarī text I. 532) that he died near the township of Saketh, but places Bhadāwah in the Sarkār of Sahār in the Āgra Subah, while he places Saketh in the Sarkār of Qannauj (see Āin-i-Akbarī (Jarrett) (II. 309 n. 3). The word فأل fā'l properly means a good omen, as opposed to طيرة ṭiyarat a bad omen, this distinction is however not strictly observed. The prophet Muhammad directed his followers not to put faith in a bad omen, but rather to take a good one; on being asked the meaning of a good omen he said "a good word which any of you may hear: such as if a person in search of anything be addressed thus, O Finder!" ² MS. (B) reads برادر دیگر another brother. Firishta gives a detailed account of the circumstances attending the accession of Sikandar; he says that most of the Lodī Amīrs favoured Ā'zam Humāyūn, and before Buhlūl's death practically forced him to summon Sikandar from Dihlī, intending to make a prisoner of him. This plot came to the ears of 'Umr Khān Shīrwānī who was a friend of Sikandar, and he consequently agreed with the mother of Sikandar, who was in the camp at the time, to warn Sikandar of his danger. Sikandar accordingly made excuses from day to day, and eventually delayed coming so long that Buhlūl died. The Amīrs then held a consultation, most of them favouring Bōrbak Shāh the eldest surviving son, but some leaning to Ā'zam Humāyūn: Zebā, the mother of Sikandar, spoke from behind a curtain in favour of her son, but was rudely repulsed by one 'Isā Khān a cousin of Buhlūl, who said, "the son of a gold worker's daughter is not fit to be king." Thereupon Khān-i-Khānān Farmālī rebuked him, and words ensued which led to a quarrel. Khān-i-Khānān took his party of Amīrs with him, and removed Buhlūl's corpse to Jalālī, summoning Sikandar from Dihlī where they placed him on the throne in the palace of Sulṭān Firūz on the banks of the Bīāh, as Sulṭān Sikandar. He then sending his father's body to Dihlī, marched against 'Isā Khān and defeated him, but pardoned him (Firishta Bo. text 338-339).

horses were lost, hardly one in ten remaining alive;¹ the zemindārs of Patna and others wrote and informed Sultān Ḥusain Sharqī of the loss of the horses, and of the scarcity of supplies in Sultān Sikandar's army, and invited him (to advance). Sultān Ḥusain collected an army, and marched from Belār with a hundred elephants against Sultān² Sikandar, who for his part crossed the Ganges by the ford of Kantit³ and came to Chenār⁴ and from thence to Banāras. Sultān Ḥusain had arrived within seventeen krohs of Banāras when Sultān Sikandar marched against him rapidly.⁵ In the midst of his march Sālbāhan the Rāja of Patna, who was a trusty zemindār, left Sultān Ḥusain and joined Sultān Sikandar.

Sultān Ḥusain drew up in line of battle, but suffered defeat and retired towards Patna.⁶ Sultān Sikandar left the camp, and pursued him⁷ with a hundred thousand light cavalry; while thus engaged he learned that Sultān Ḥusain had gone to Bihār. After nine days Sultān Sikandar arrived,⁸ and joining his camp set out for Bihār. Sultān Ḥusain, leaving his deputy⁹ in Bihār, could not remain there, but proceeded to Khul Gānw one of the dependencies of Lakhnauti, and Bihār fell into the hands of Sikandar's troops.¹⁰ Thence the Sultān proceeded to Tirhut and conquered it.

In this year great scarcity and dearth occurred in the camp of the Sultān; orders were promulgated² remitting the customary tribute of grain in all provinces, in fact they were entirely abolished. From thence he came to the township of Sāran, and divided that district among his own followers in perpetuity,³ and came by way of Maḥlīgārḥ⁴ to Jaunpūr, and having spent six months there proceeded to Panna.⁵ And in the year 904 H. Bāndhūgarḥ was one of the two chief fortresses of the province of Bāndhū (which corresponds nearly to the state of Rewa) and lies south of Rewa (Rewā) distant about 60 miles, and S. S. The majority of the disaffected and disappointed Amīrs urged Fath Khān the son of Sultān Buhlūl to seize the empire. He in his simplicity communicated ³ this secret to his mother, and also to Shaikh Tāhir, and a party who were among the confidants of the Sultān, at the same time giving them ⁴ a memorandum containing the names of those confederate Amīrs. The party above mentioned diverted him from that insane idea with friendly admonition. To prove their own innocence of complicity in that treasonable design, they took that memorandum to Sultān Sikandar, ⁵ who devised some specious pretext for scattering in different directions all those Amīrs ⁶ who had shewn partiality for the Prince ⁷ Fath Khān.

The Sultān accordingly sent orders from Sambal to Khawāṣṣ Khān the Governor of Māchhiwāra, ⁹ to seize Asghar and send him (into his presence); but Asghar anticipating this had gone humbly to Sambal where he suffered imprisonment; and Khawāṣṣ Khān received the Governorship of Dihli. At page 170 of that translation is found the account of the earthquake referred to by our author. Bāber says "there were thirty-three shocks that same day, and for the space of a month the earth shook two or three times every day and night." The date is not given, but the account follows closely upon that of the death of his mother, which he states occurred in the month of Muḥarram, and we may from the account reckon about 40 days afterwards so that it must have been early in the month of Ṣafar.

In this year Muḥammad Khān of Nāgor, influenced by the fact that certain of his relations¹¹ had sought and obtained an interview with the Sultān, evinced great respect for the Sultān, reading the Khaṭbah in Nāgor in his name without raising any objection,¹² so that in this way a new territory¹³ came¹⁴ into the possession of the Sultān.

to Hindustān at the time of the ruin of Multān, and introduced the systematic study of the intellectual sciences into that country. Before their time, with the exception of the Sharḥ-i-Shamsiyah, and the *Sharḥ-i-Shāhīf*¹ there were no books current in Hindustān which treated of logic and metaphysics. I heard also from my masters,² that more than forty expert and profoundly learned men have arisen from among the disciples of Shāikh 'Abdu-llāh, for example, Miṣṣān Lādan, Jamāl Khān of Dihlī, Miṣṣān Shāikh of Gwālīār,³ Mīrān Saiyyid Jalāl of Badāon, and others. They say also that Sultān Sikandar, during the instruction of the aforesaid Shāikh 'Abdu-llāh, used to come⁴ and seat himself quietly in a corner unseen by the rest, fearing lest he should interrupt the lesson of the other students, and when the lesson was ended they used to exchange the customary salutation of *Salām 'alaikum*⁵ and mix freely with each other.

And Shāikh 'Azizu-llah of Tulumba, who was a man of great probity and rectitude, had such an abundant genius and marvellous power of recollection,⁶ that no matter how difficult or minute the subject matter of a book which a student of intelligence might be reading, he would give his lesson in it without previously reading it; and that time after time when they came up for examination, and propounded the most inscrutable problems, the learned Shāikh would explain them on the instant while giving his lesson.

It seems to be used here for the power of calling up at will any impression. It is not memory, or rather retentiveness, but implies the power of recalling impressions by purely mental forces after the removal of the stimulus. MSS. (A) (B) read استحضاری غریب داشته.

One of his pupils was¹ Miyān Ḥatim Saḥbālī, who is commonly said to have read the *Commentary on the Miṣṭāḥ*² more than thirty times in the course of his life, and the *Muṭawwal*³ more than forty times, from the first letter of the Bism'illāh to the last of the word Tammat.⁴

Another is Shaiḫu-l-Ḥadiyāḥ Jaunpūri, the author of many worthy compositions and excellent books, who wrote a commentary extending over several volumes upon the Ḥidāyah-i-Fiqh,⁵ while there is no need of mentioning his commentary on the Kāfiyah:⁶ in addition to these he wrote notes upon the Tafsir-i-

Miṣṭāḥu-l-'ulūm (clavis doctrinarum), see Hājī Khalīfah 12578. This book was written by Sirāj-u-d-Dīn Abū Ya'qūb Yūsuf bin Abi Muḥammad bin Alī as Sikkākī who died 626 A.H. (1228 A.D.)

The book was divided into three parts, of which the first treated of grammatical inflection, the second of syntax, and the third of arrangement and composition of sentences. (علمی المعانی والبیان) Timaiu-l-ma'āni wal bayān. (Regarding Timu-l-bayān, etc., see Garcin de Tassy Rhetorique des langues de l'orient Musulmān, pp. 1-5.)

A commentary on all three parts was written by Maulā Ḥusām-u-d-Dīn al Muwazzinī, and this is probably the commentary alluded to in the text. Other commentaries were written on the third part, of which Hājī Khalīfah mentions three as worthy of special notice.

³ Muṭawwal (commentarius longior). By this book is meant the commentary written by Sa'du-d-Dīn at-Taftazānī (who died 792 A. H.) on the book called Talḫiṣu-l-Miṣṭāḥ. It was called by the name of Muṭawwal or long commentary because after its completion in A. H. 748 its author wrote a second commentary, an abbreviation of the first, and gave it the name of Mukhtaṣar or shorter commentary. (See H. K. II. p. 404).

⁴ All works written by Muslims commence with بسم الله Bism'illāh. In the name of God. The word تمت tammat, stands for تمت الكتاب tammat-il kitāb, the book is finished, and forms the last word, answering to our word 'Finis.' MSS. (A) and (B) write only بسم.

⁵ Ḥidāyah-i-Fiqh. (see Hājī Khalīfah 14366.)

Eventually it became clearly evident that the former pair of worthies were superior in oratory, while the two latter were the better writers. The death of Shaiikh 'Abd-ullāh occurred in the year 922 H.; the following chronogram was invented to commemorate it: Ūlāika lahum ud-darajātu-l-ullā.⁶

And among the poets of the time of Sikandar, was the afore-said Shaiikh Jamālī Kanbawī of Dihli, to whom Sultān Sikandar was in the habit of submitting verses which he had written, for his opinion.

Speaking generally, he had many excellent points, he was a man who had travelled much, and had been honoured with the fellowship of our master the saintly Jāmi,⁷ may God sanctify his resting place, and had gained many advantages from⁸ him and won his approbation,⁹ and was moreover in the habit of submitting¹⁰ his poems to that revered master: The following verses are by him:

He also wrote a Tazkirah (Book of Memoirs) to recount the assemblies of some of the Shaikhs of Hindūstān, called the Siyar-u-L-'Arifin (Biographies of the Saints) which is not entirely free from defects and discrepancies. It commences from the venerable Khawājā³ Mu'inn-l-Haqq wau-d-Dīn Ajmiri, and finishes with his own spiritual guide Shaikh Samān-d-Dīn⁴ Kanhawī of Dihli, in addition to which it contains other matter both⁵ prose and poetry. His diwān is made up of eight or nine thousand couplets.

SULTĀN IBRAHĪM BIN SULTĀN SIKANDAR LODĪ,

Ascended the throne in Āgra in the year 923 H. with the concurrence of the Amīrs, and Shahzāda Jalāl Khān ibn-i-Sultān Sikandar⁶ [was appointed to the rule of Jaunpūr and was styled by the title of Sultān, while Khān-i-Jahān Lūhānī⁷ governor of Rāpūr came to Āgra] and blamed the Amīrs greatly for associating (Jalāl Khān) in the government⁸ of the kingdom; and after that he had pointed out to them the foolishness⁹ of this procedure orders were issued to the Amīrs of the eastern districts to seize Jalāl Khān and bring him to the Court. He however went from Jaunpūr to Kalpi and collected a large following, and after establishing the Khutbah and sikkah in his own name, assumed the title of Sultān Jalāl-d-Dīn. A'zam Hūmayūn Shīrwānī sided with him for a time, but eventually came and had an audience of Sultān Ibrāhīm. Sultān Ibrāhīm sent to the fortress of Hānsī certain of his brothers who were imprisoned, for instance Shāhzāda Isma'il Khān, and Ḥusain Khān, and others,¹ and appointed for each of them food and clothing and two² servants from the private establishment. Then he proceeded in person with the object of conquering³ the Eastern districts, and came to Bhūn Gānw, and having settled the disturbances in Mawās⁴ came to Qanauj. There he nominated a large number of Amīrs to proceed against Jalāl Khān, who with thirty thousand cavalry and a certain number of elephants had gone off in the direction of Āgra. Malik Ādam Kākar was sent by the Sultān to defend Āgra, and certain other Amīrs arrived to support him. They succeeded in persuading Jalāl Khān, by making pleasing overtures and using attractive arguments, to surrender his paraphernalia of royalty and kingly splendour to the Sultān, in order that they might prefer his application for pardon of his past offences and obtain for him the Kalpī district as a jāegīr. Jalāl Khān instantly agreed, and made over his royal canopy, his kettle-drums, etcetera to Malik Ādam with instructions to convey them to the Sultān in the neighbourhood of Itāwa.

¹ It will be remembered that A'zam Hamāyūn was the eldest son of Sultān Sikandar Lodī, Isma'il and Ḥusain were respectively the fourth and fifth sons, Jalāl being the second son, and Ibrāhīm the third.

Jai Chand, a Zemindār of Chartūli, a dependency of the pargana of Kol which was better known as Mawās, had fought against 'Umr Khān the son of Sikandar Khān Sūr and had slain him. Accordingly Malik Qāsun Hākīm of Sanbhal proceeded against him and put that rebel to death, and having quelled that sudden rebellion came and joined the king at Qanauj.

The Sultān would not agree to his proposal of peace, and despatched a large army to oppose Jalāl Khān, who fled in consternation and took refuge¹ with the Rāja of Gwāliār, and the Amīrs of Sikandar's party, who had heretofore been a source of weakness to the administration of the empire, one and all owed allegiance to the Sultān. The Sultān experienced² a revulsion of feeling with regard to Miyān Bhoḥ, who was the chief of the Amīrs of Sikandar, and had been his vazīr and privy councillor, accordingly he cast him into chains and sent him to Malik Ādam; however, he treated his son with kindness and advanced him to the high offices formerly held by his father. Miyān Bhoḥ died in prison, and A'zam Humāyūn Shirwānī, the Governor of Karra, was sent with thirty thousand cavalry and three³ hundred elephants to attempt the reduction of Gwāliār. Jalāl Khān fled from Gwāliār and went to Mālwa to Sultān Maḥmūd of Mālwa. After the arrival of the Sultān's troops Rāi Vikramājī the son of Rāi Mān Singh,⁴ who, after the decease⁵ of his father, held the government of Gwāliār, was not able to cope with them, and could not properly defend the fortress. It was converted into gongs, and bells, and implements of all kinds. 328.

In those days Sulṭān Ibrāhīm becoming distrustful of the old Amirs, imprisoned the greater number of them,² and expelled (others) in different directions; and inasmuch as Jalāl Khān could not get on with Sulṭān Maḥmūd of Mālwa, he fled from Mālwa and came to the country of Kara Kanka,³ where he fell into the hands of a tribe of the Gonds,⁴ who took him prisoner and sent him as a present⁵ to the Sulṭān who ordered him to be taken to Hānsī and imprisoned with his brothers. Sultān Ibrāhīm accordingly despatched Aḥmad Khān, the brother of Ā'zam Humāyūn Lodi, in command of a vast army,² to oppose the Amirs who had fled from his camp and had joined Islām Khān. With him also he sent³ other Khāns of eminence, such as Khān-i-Khānān Farmali, and others of similar rank. Near the township of Bāngarman, in the neighbourhood of Qanauj,⁴ Iqbāl Khān, the chief cavalry commander under Ā'zam Humāyūn, with five thousand cavalry and some splendid elephants, broke out of ambuscade and attacked the forces of the Sultān, and after throwing them all into confusion⁵ withdrew (into ambush). The Sultān by way of precaution despatched⁶ a further force to their assistance, but the enemy, who had about forty thousand cavalry, well armed, and five hundred elephants, shewed a firm front against them, until Naṣīr Khān Luhāvi with other generals arrived from the direction of Bihār and engaged the enemy on both sides. A fierce conflict ensued between the two armies, such a conflict as baffles description, and after a severe struggle⁷ the rebels were defeated. Islām Khān was killed and Sa'id Khān Lodi was taken prisoner, thus the rebellion was quenched.

Miyān Husain ⁴ Farmali was assassinated in Chanderi, at the instigation of the Sultān, by certain ruffianly Shaiikh Zādas of that place, and Daryā Khān Lūhānī, governor of Bihār, and Khān-i-Jahān Lodi being alarmed,⁵ became disaffected. After a short time Daryā Khān died, and his son Bahādur Khān turned rebel and occupied the place of his father. The revolted Amirs made common cause with him, so that he collected a force of nearly a hundred thousand cavalry in the vicinity of Bihār, and gained possession of that country,⁶ assuming the title of Sultān Muḥammad,⁷ establishing the Khutbah and sikka in his own name. His army penetrated as far as the country of Sambal, and brought it within the area of their control.⁸ The Khutbah was read in his name in Bihār and the territories adjacent, for some time. It so happened that the son of Daulat Khān Lodi, whose name was Khān-i-Khānān ⁹ came from Lāhor to Āgra to visit the Sultān, but being suspicious of his intentions fled from his court, and went to his father. Eventually Khān-i-Khānān laid a complaint¹ against his father before the supreme King Bābār, and poisoned his mind against him, and led to discord between them, as will be related if the Most High God so will it. Khān-i-Khānān was living up to the date of the rebellion of Sher Shāh, but at last died in prison. Sultān Muḥammad departed to the world of permanence from Bihār, and the Amīrs on all sides rebelled against Sultān Ibrāhīm, and great damage was inflicted upon the kingdom. The pillars of the empire began to totter,² and the standard of the fortune of King Bābar floated high.

The following is a brief epitome of the matter: Daulat Khān and Ghāzī Khān his son, together with the other noble Amīrs of Sultān Ibrāhīm, sent 'Alam Khān Lodi to Kābul, bearing despatches to Zahiru-d-Din Bābar Pādishāh, inviting him to attempt the conquest of Hindūstān. Accordingly Bābar Pādishāh appointed a number of his own Amīrs to accompany 'Alam Khān, with orders to advance and conquer that country. Having conquered Siākot and Lāhor with its dependencies, they represented the condition of affairs (to Bābar) and the following qit'ah was written to commemorate the date of the conquest of Hindūstān.

Verse.

Zahiru-d-Din Muḥammad Shāh Bābar,
In fortune Sikandar, in force a Bahrām,
By his fortune conquered the country of Hind,
The date of this was Faṭḥ badaulat.³ (Victory by fortune).

Bābar Pādishāh marching continuously, arrived at the banks of the river Indus, and drew up the whole force, composed of ten thousand [veteran] cavalry⁴ in that camp after passing the troops in review. In the interval, Daulat Khān and Ghāzī Khān had turned back with thirty thousand veteran⁵ cavalry composed of Afghāns and other tribes, and had occupied the town of Kalānūr, and prepared to engage Bābar's Amīrs at

Lāhor, while Amīr Khusrū, who had strengthened the fortress of Siālkoṭ, evacuated it as soon as Ghāzī Khān arrived, and took refuge in flight to the camp. Some days afterwards Bābar arrived at Siālkoṭ, where he encamped [and after laying waste the township of Siālkoṭ founded Dholphur.]¹ 'Ālam Khān proceeded to Dihlī by order of Bābar, and encountering Sultān Ibrāhīm, made² a night attack upon the army of the Sultān; and Jalāl Khān with certain other Amirs arrived in the course of that night and joined 'Ālam Khān. Sultān Ibrāhīm did not stir from his tent till dawn. The followers³ of 'Ālam Khān, fancying they had secured an easy victory, were scattered in all directions, only a small number remained⁴ with 'Ālam Khān. Sultān Ibrāhīm, urging an elephant forward, attacked the enemy's centre, who could not withstand⁵ his attack. The faithless 'Ālam Khān passing through⁶ the Doāb came to Sihhind, and thence fled for refuge to the fortress of Gungūna,⁷ one of the dependencies of Malot,⁸ at the foot of the hills. Dilāwar Khān Lūhānī separated from him, and joined the service of Bābar Padishāh, and became one of his faithful adherents. 'Ālam Khān also after some time came and had an interview with Bābar, who, in accordance with his former custom, gave him an honourable reception, and as he was halting at the time of the interview he distinguished him with a robe of honour and other marks of favour; and when he pitched camp in the neighbourhood of Kalānūr, Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā and other Amirs⁹ came from Lāhor and joined him. Thence he proceeded to the fortress of Malot in which Ghāzī Khān [and Daulat Khān were, and besieged it, and Ghāzī Khān and Khān-i-Khānān]¹⁰ determined upon flight

Some few days after this occurrence Daulat Khān, who had been imprisoned by Bābar, died in prison⁵ and Bābar proceeded to the Siwālik hills in pursuit of Ghāzī Khān, and encamped⁶ at the foot of the Dūn,⁷ which is a very high hill, Ghāzī Khān was not to be found. Bābar accordingly returned stage by stage to the frontiers of Śīhrind, and pitched his camp on the banks of the Ghaghar;⁸ thence he came to the borders of⁹ Sāmāna and Sanām, and gave orders to Amīr Kittah Beg to¹⁰ proceed to within a short distance of the camp of Sultān Ibrāhīm, who, after the defeat of 'Ālam Khān, had stood fast¹¹ near Dihli, and bring intelligence of the position and strength of his army; and at this camp Babar the Afghān who had been in revolt came and had an interview (with Bābar). From this camp also Shāh-zāda Muḥammad Humāyūn Mirzā, together with Khwāja Kalān Beg and other notable Amīrs, were despatched against Ḥamid Khān the Khass-i-Khūl (Chief of Cavalry) of Sulṭān Ibrāhīm, who was advancing at the head of a force from Ḥissār Firoza to give them battle. Ḥamid Khān was defeated, many of his men being either killed or taken prisoners.¹ The sarkār of Ḥissār Firoza with a revenue of two crores,² was given as a reward to the Shāh-zāda, and Bābar Pādīshāh encamped on the bank of the Jamna, two marches from Shāhābād, and detailed Khwāja Muḥammad Sulṭān Mirzā, and Sulṭān Junaid Mirzā³ Birlās to oppose Dā'ūd Khān and a body of Amīrs of the army of Sulṭān Ibrāhīm, who had crossed the Jamna with five or six thousand cavalry. Accordingly they also crossed the Jamna and gave the Afghāns a second drubbing, killing them and taking them prisoners, while the remnant of the sword took refuge in the camp of Sulṭān Ibrāhīm.

Marching thence, having drawn up his right and left wings and centre,⁴ King Bābar reviewed them in person. Eight hundred gun-carriages⁵ had been prepared in one day. Ustā⁶ 'Alī Qulī the Artillerist, acting upon my orders, had followed the custom of the Turkish artillery, and bound together the gun-carriages with chains and raw-hide thongs, twisting them into the form of a whip-lash.⁷ And in the interval between each pair of gun-carriages six or seven shelter parapets⁸ were placed, so that on the day of Bābar Padishāh also, having arrayed his army with all the pomp and circumstance of war, and shewing a firm unbroken front, gave orders detailing from the left wing Amir Qarā Qūrchi and Amir Shaiikh 'Alī, with certain other Amīrs, and from the right wing, Wali Qizil and Bāba Qushqah, with the whole force of Mughūls, to form two parties and attack the enemy in the rear, while the Amīrs of the right and left wings in a body, and from the picked troops,⁴ Amir Muḥammad Gokultāsh, and Amir Yūnas 'Alī, and Amir Shāh Maṣṣūr Birlās, with other famous Amīrs, should lead the front attack: and since the Afghāns [were specially observant of the right wing, Amir 'Abdu-l-'azīz, who was with the reserve, was ordered by king Bābar to reinforce the right wing],⁵ and when he got within bowshot of the enemy,⁶ the bodies of the enemies took to themselves wings, and the bird of the soul of many of them took flight from the cage of the body, while the wings of others⁷ were clipped by the shears of the two-edged sword.

Lāhor towards Fathpūr, and had to cross that plain, when these terrifying noises reached his ears, and the people who were with him imagined that some enemy was upon them. I also witnessed with my own eyes what I had heard related. Submitting this divine mystery to the Almighty we went on our way.

Sultān Ibrāhīm together with a party of attendants was taken in an unknown desert and put to the sword, his head⁴ was brought into the presence of Bābar Pādishāh, and⁵ about five or six thousand who formed Sultān Ibrāhīm's retinue were put to death in the one spot.

This event took place in the year 932 H. (1525 A.D.), and the Hindūs invented this date *Shahid shudan-i-Ibrāhīm*² (the martyrdom of Ibrāhīm) to commemorate it. From that time the empire once more passed from the Afghān Lodi family, and rested on the descendants of Amīr Timūr Šāhibqirān. The duration of the reign of Sultān Ibrāhīm was nine years.

After this ascended³ the throne⁴ of sovereignty, and by his justice and liberality adorned the world with fresh lustre and glory, and sent rewards to Samarqand, 'Irāq, Khurāsān and Kāshghar. He also despatched offerings⁵ to the sacred cities of Makkah and Medinah, and to the holy places of pilgrimage, and sent off gold beyond price to all the inhabitants of Badakhshān and Kābul, to each its separate store, from the vast treasures of Hindūstān. He converted the world into a rose garden. The Amirs of Hindūstān, notwithstanding his conciliatory behaviour and efforts to improve⁶ their fortunes, did not yield obedience to him, but behaved like unruly savages,⁷ and took to fortifying themselves in their fortresses and estates,⁸ while Qāsim Sanbālī in Sambal, and Nizām Khān in Baiāna, and Hasan Khān Miwātī in Alwar, and Tātār Khān Sārang Khān⁹ in Gwālīar, took refuge in their respective fortresses. Itāwa was held by Quṭb Khān, and Kalpi by 'Ālam Khān, while Qanauj and all the eastern districts were in the possession of the Afghāns, who, in the reign of Sultān Ibrāhīm also, had refused to own his sway,¹⁰ and¹¹ having raised the son of Bihār Khān to the throne, gave¹² him the title of Sultān Muhammad; his empire extended as far as Bihār, and Naṣir Khān Lūhānī and Ma'rūf Farmali and other powerful Amirs gave in their allegiance to him, while a slave of Sultān Ibrāhīm named Marghūb, having fortified the township of Mahāwan, which is situated at a distance of twenty krohs from Āgra, on the far side of the river Jamna, refused to own him as king.

Accordingly troops were detailed by Bābar Pādīshāh to conquer these countries, and Firoz Khān, and Sārang Khān,¹ and Shaikh Bāyazīd, the brother of Muṣṭafā Farmali, with other Afghāns coming and tendering their submission, were given jāegirs.² Shaikh Khūran who was one of the Hindustānī Amirs, and also one of their most accomplished men,³ being unrivalled in the art of music, came with his whole following and had an interview (with Bābar) in the Doāb.

The territory of Sambal was conferred as a jāegir upon Shāh-zāda Muḥammad Humāyūn Mirzā. The Amirs seized Qāsim Sanbali and sent him to Bābar, while another body of men had been sent against Baiāna, and had besieged Nizām Khān, keeping him closely invested. In this year also Rānā Sānkā having wrested the fortress of Khandār,⁴ which is in the vicinity of Rantanbhūr, from Ḥasan son of Maḥkan, was in possession of it; and Shāh-zāda Muḥammad Humāyūn Mirzā,⁵ with a party of Amirs who had been appointed⁶ to capture and hold Dholpūr, were ordered to proceed against a body of Afghāns of the Lūhānī faction who were close on fifty thousand, and had advanced beyond Qanauj. Both Saiyyid Mahdī Khawāja, and Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā, who had been ordered to capture Itāwa,⁷ joined the retinue of the Shāh-zāda,⁸ who brought into subjection the whole of the eastern districts as far as Jaunpūr. In the meanwhile Rānā Sānkā and Ḥasan Khān Miwāti raised to the throne one of the sons of Sultān Sikandar Lodī, named Sultān Muḥammad, with the title of Pādīshāh, and started on an expedition against the territories of Bābar with a large following and vast⁹ army.

Marching by way of Basāwar¹ they arrived in the neighbourhood of Fatḥpūr, otherwise known as Sikri.² Nizām Khān, the Governor of Baiāna made representations to the Court of Bābar and gained a certain degree of influence. Rafi'ū-d-Dīn Ṣafwī, who was one of the most powerful Saiyyids of Balkh,³ and the chief⁴ of the traditionists, and who, having come to Hindūstān in the reign of Sulṭān Sikandar Lodī, had been given the title of Ḥaẓrat-i-Muqaddas (His Holiness), came and had audience of the Sulṭān and tendered his service. Tārtār Khān Sārang Khānī also, after that Rānā Sānkā seized the fortress of Khandhār, and the infidels had got the upper hand, first of all sent a representation to King (Bābar) saying, I intend to surrender the fortress of Gwāliār; but when Khwāja Raḥīm⁵ Dād and Shaikh Khūran and a further party also arrived, he was ashamed (of this weakness). This party then, by the guidance of Shaikh Muḥammad Ghaṣ, who was unrivalled in his time, and was the chief authority on the science of da'watul-asmā,⁶ entered the fort by some skilful stratagem and took it from Tātār Khān whether he would or no, and sent him into the presence of Bābar Pādishāh. In just this same way also Muḥammad Zaitūn the Afghān gave up the fort of Dholpūr to⁷ the Amīrs of Bābar, and coming in had an interview with the King. In the meanwhile, Rānā Sānkā⁸ had arrived on the confines of Baiāna and was doing damage to the country, and had, after a halt of a few days, reached Fatḥpūr; Bābar Pādishāh, with a small body of the soldiery which he had with him, left the capital of Āgra with the object of engaging him in battle. He also wrote⁹ a despatch to summon Shāhzāda Muḥammad Humāyūn Mirzā, ordering him to leave Jaunpūr in charge of certain eminent Amīrs, and to come himself with all speed to take part in that war; the victorious Prince, having taken the country of Ḥarand¹⁰ and

He lost no time in attaching himself to the king's service, and was granted many royal favours.

At this same time, that pattern for the great³ and noble, Khwāja Khāwind Naqshbandī arrived from Kābul, and the Amīrs sitting in council determined by a majority, that, seeing that the army of Rānā Sānkā is currently reported to exceed in multitude the ants and locusts, it appears advisable to strengthen the fortress of Āgra, and that, leaving it in charge of a garrison, the sovereign of Islām should proceed in his own excellent person towards the

The king did not agree to the decision of this council, but girded up his loins to carry into effect his intention of a jihād, and setting his heart upon martyrdom, marched in the direction of the field of Fatḥpūr and made this project the aim and object of his ambition.⁴

The composer of this Muntakhab (selection) also, in the year 965 H. Upon the leaf of the rose she wrote that curling ringlet
And then displayed her moon-bright face from³ one corner.⁴

The death of the Maulavi took place at the time of the return of the Emperor Muḥammad Humāyūn, whose abode is in Paradise, from his expedition to Gujrāt in the year 942 H., and Mir Khond⁵ Amir the historian invented the chronogram Shihābu-ṣ-ṣāqib. And one of the wonderful⁶ inventions of that Emperor, whose shelter is the pardon of God, is the Khatt-i-Bābari (the Bābari script), in which writing he indited a copy of the Qur'ān, and sent it to the sacred city of Makka: his anthology of Persian and Tūrki poetry is well-known. He has also composed a book on the Hanifite Theology called Mubaiyyin,⁷ and Shaikh Zaiun-d-Dīn⁸ wrote a commentary upon it which he entitled Mubīn. His treatises⁹ on Prosody are also in common use.

¹ Shihābu-d-Dīn was called Shihābu-ṣ-ṣāqib (the brilliant star); these words also give the date of his death, see post.

³ MS. (A) reads در for از.

⁴ The following is the explanation of this Mu'amma which is contained in the two last lines of the Rubā'ī. سر زلف آن کرد رقم گل سر زلف. That is to say: she took the word گل and removed from it the dāira or curved portion of the ل lām, thus leaving ک; to this she added سر زلف ān Sar-i-zulf, that is to say the last letter of the word زلف, the letter ف, thus having ک...ف. To this she added رخ مه rukh-i-mah, the first letter of the word مه, which is in Arabic شهر. This will give the whole word کاشف.

NAṢĪRU-D-DĪN [WĀU-D-DUNYĀ]¹ MUHAMMAD HUMĀYŪN
PĀDŠĀH-I-GHĀZĪ.

344.

Marching by forced marches from Saibal in the year 937 H. (1530 A.D.), with the concurrence of Amīr Khalifa who was the agent and prime minister² of the Government, ascended the throne. The following chronogram was invented to record the date.

Verse.

Muḥammad Humāyūn Shāh of auspicious fortune
Who is the best of kings by virtue of his merit
The year in which he ascended the kingly throne
Was distinguished by the words "Khairu-l-Mulūk."³

Moreover, inasmuch as at the time of his accession he made present of trays filled with gold, another chronogram was invented in the words Kighī-i-Zar (Tray of gold). After disposing of all matters of importance he led an army against the fortress of Kālinjar,⁴ and,⁵ after quelling the insurrection of Sultān 'Ālam ibn-i-Sultān Sikandar Lodī, who had raised a revolt in Jaunpūr, returned to Āgra and made a great feast, at which entertainment twelve thousand people were distinguished by the bestowal of robes of honour.

Verse.

A king will have the upper hand of his enemies,
When his army is happy and contented;
But if he withholds their just reward from his soldiery,
They in turn will withhold their hands from the sword.

In those days,⁶ Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā ibn-i-Badī'u-z-Zamān Mirzā⁷ ibn-i-Sultān Ḥusain Mirzā, who had hostile intentions was captured. Sending him to the fortress of Baiāna, orders were given for his eyes to be put out. The pupil of his eye remained uninjured however, and shortly after, he escaped from prison and fled for refuge to Sultān Bahādur of Gujrāt. It is said that at the time when Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā joined Sultān Bahādur, the latter was engaged in besieging Chitor, and the weather was exceedingly hot. Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā was seized with a pain at the heart,¹ for the cure of which the physicians declared gulqand (confection of roses)² to be indispensable. Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā begged Sultān Bahādur to send him a piece of this gulqand. He accordingly summoned his shurbatdār (preparer of beverages), and enquired how much gulqand there had been brought with the camp; he replied that there must be more than twenty cart loads. The whole of this he sent to the camp of Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā,³ and apologetically explained that this amount had been estimated as the probable requirements of the army, if it were not sufficient he begged to be excused. It eventually transpired that the juice of the gulqand used to be extracted for his use, and that for this reason there were⁴ so many carts accompanying him. Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā, with his two sons Ulugh Mirzā and Shāh Mirzā, proceeded to Qanauj and laid the foundations of revolt, and when the king, now deceased, wrote and despatched to Sultān Bahādur letters summoning Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā, Sultān Bahādur sent back a discourteous reply;⁵ he accordingly determined upon the conquest of Gujrāt. Bahādur, having collected an army to reduce the fortress of Chitor and oppose Rānā Sānkā, engaged him in battle, and besieged him. Tātār Khān Lodī being despatched by him, came and gained possession of the fortress of Baiāna, extending his depredations as far as Āgra; and after a fierce conflict¹ with Mirzā Haudāl, in which he attacked with three thousand² men, was put to the sword with all his following. While Sultān Bahādur was besieging Chitor for the second time, Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh³ moved against him from Āgra; and in this same year Mirzā Kāmrān, proceeding by forced marches from Lāhor to Qandahār, defeated Sām Mirzā, the brother of Shāh⁴ Tāhmāsp, who was besieging Khwāja Kalān Bēg, and⁵ the following hemistich gives the date.

Maulānā Bekasī⁷ also writes the following

At that time when the crown and the golden goblet stands in sight, 346.

When amid the joy and feasting is seen the form of the

I enquired from wisdom, why hast thou cast down in our

She answered, the heaven, by way of assigning a date to this

The literal meaning of the line may be taken thus:

Has cast away the crown of gold (Taj-i-Zar) from the defeat of the army of Sām (Shikast-i-Sipāh-i-Sām). By Taj-i-Zar is meant the letter ژ, the first letter of the word ژر, the value of which is 7; this being cast out from the value of Shikast-i-Sipāh-i-Sām gives 940 - 7 = 942.

while he was engaged in the siege of Chitor,¹ halted at Sārangpūr. Sultān Bahādur meanwhile forcibly reduced the fort of Chitor, after which he engaged in war with Pādshāh (Humāyūn) for a space of two months in the neighbourhood of Mandsūr, a dependency of Mālwa, but owing to the fact that no supplies of grain could reach the camp of Bahādur, man and beast died from starvation, and ² Bahādur with five of his most trusty Amīrs left the royal tent by the rear door and fled towards Mandsūr.³ The following verse commemorates the date of this event :—

Humāyūn Shah-i-Ghāzi, who has thousands of slaves in his palace like Jamshīd,

When he came victorious towards Gujrāt, returned in triumph the glory of the sons of Timūr.

Since Bahādur fell humbled and abject,

The date thereof was "The disgrace of Bahādur."⁴

Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh pursued him, and the Mughūl soldiers came upon Bahādur one night while he was asleep,⁵ and were near taking him prisoner, but he made his escape with five or six horsemen towards Gujrāt. Sultān 'Ālam Lodī, however, fell into their hands and they cut off his feet. The army of Humāyūn Pādshāh pursued Bahādur by rapid marches and laid waste Aḥmadābād. Bahādur leaving Aḥmadābād went to Kanbhāyat,⁶ and from there to the port of Dīp,⁷ and at that time the fortress of Jānpānir¹ was also taken after a battle by the Pādshāh, and treasure beyond computation fell into his hands.

The year in which this happened may be learned from the following verse:—

Wisdom sought for the date of the victory of Shāh Humāyūn and discovered this,

“It was the ninth of the month of Šafar.”²

Then Bahādūr, in concert with the Zamīndars of the country³ of Sorath, collected a force and proceeded towards Aḥmadābād. Mirzā ‘Askarī who, after the return of Humāyūn Pādshāh towards the East,⁴ remained at Aḥmadābād with the intention of having the Khuṭbah read in his own name, in which project he had the support of Amīr Hindū Bēg; however, he could not carry out his plan, and after slight opposition left for Jānpānir, the governor of which place, Tardī Bēg, having entrenched himself, sent letters to the court conveying the tidings of the revolt of Mirzā ‘Askarī. But at the time when Humāyūn had left Mandir on his way to Āgra Mirzā ‘Askarī met him on the road and gave in his submission, and Bahādūr took Jānpānir from Tardī Bēg without the necessity of fighting.⁵ [And in this year Shāikh⁶ Jamālī Kanbawī of Dihlī left this transitory world for the kingdom of eternity. A chronogram has been invented to commemorate this in the words Khusrū-i-Hind būda (he was the Khusrū of Hindustan)].⁷ In this year also Shāh Tahmāsp came up against Qandahār from ‘Irāq to take vengeance on Sām Mirzā,⁸ and⁹ Khwāja Kalān Beg leaving the city empty, and leaving the Diwānkhāna (Hall of audience) locked up just as it was, adorned with its splendid carpets, its magnificent furniture, and all the appurtenances of the audience chamber, came out to invite Shāh Tahmāsp to alight at that pleasantly prepared¹ resting place, which he did, and² gave Khawāja Kalān Bēg great praise for his conduct, saying, that is a good servant whom Kāmran Mirzā possesses. Shāh Tahmāsp left Qandahār in charge of Badagh Khān, one of his own Amīrs, and returned to 'Irāq. Mirzā Kāmran at this same juncture, proceeded by forced marches from Lāhor, and arriving at Qandahār took possession of it. Muhammad Zannān Mirzā, whom Bahādur had despatched after his defeat to inflict injury upon Hindustān, took advantage of the absence³ of Mirzā Kāmran to invest Lāhor; but, when he heard tidings of the return of Humāyūn Pādshāh to Gujrāt, retraced his steps. At the expiry of one year from the accession⁴ of Humāyūn Pādshāh in Āgra, Shīr Khān Afghān Sūr, in the absence of Humāyūn, collected a large force, and took possession⁵ of the country of Gour, Bihār, and Jaunpūr, and also the fortress of Chinār. Humāyūn Pādshāh encamped⁶ before the fort of Chinār, with the intention of opposing Shīr Khān, on the fourteenth of the month of Ṣafar in the year 943 H., and besieged Jalāl Khān, son of Shīr Khān, who eventually obtained the title of Islām Shāh. In a short time by the exertions of Rūmī Khān the Artillerist, (on whose name Sultān Bahādur had written and despatched the following enigma:— [Haif bāshad nām i ān sag bar zabān,

⁵ MS. (A) متصرف شد.

⁶ MS. (A) معسكر ساخته.

⁷ This معما mu'ammā or enigma requires explanation: The English version is naturally meaningless.

The words in the original, رومی خان Rūmīkhān, contain as will be seen the word میخ mikh between the syllables Rā...ān. These form the word روان Rawān, one meaning of which is life, for which the synonym in Persian is جان jān. So the writer says: Place the word mikh in his life (روان rawān,) and you have his name رومی خان Rū mikh ān, i.e., Rūmī Khān.

he reduced¹ that fortress, but Jalāl Khān escaped by means of a boat, and joined Shīr Khān who was engaged in conflict² with Naṣīb Shāh Governor of Bangāla. Humāyūn³ Pādshāh arrived, after that the Governor of Bangāla had been wounded in battle with Shīr Khān. Naṣīb Shāh⁴ submitted himself to Humāyūn, and acted as his escort. Having entrusted the Government of Jaunpūr to Mir Hindū Bēg, with the rank of Amīru-l-Umarā, and a golden throne, he proceeded by way of Garhī,⁵ a narrow pass separating the countries of Bihār and Bangāla, which Quṭb Khān the son of Shīr Khān and Khawass Khān, the well-known servant of Shīr Khān, had fortified, and came into Bangāla. Shīr Khān not being able to withstand him, left by way of Chahār Khān⁶ to the fortress of Rohtās, and fell upon the rear of Humāyūn's army, and gained possession of the fortress of Rohtās by crafty means, in the following manner. He alleged as a pretext that he had a large number of families⁷ with him, and having placed two thousand armed Afghāns in closed litters⁸ sent them towards the fort. The Rāja of Rohtās being fired with avaricious designs upon the wealth and families of the Afghāns threw open the gates of the fort. Then the Afghān soldiers who were concealed in the litters leapt out, and entering the fort,⁹ put them all to the sword.⁹

A still better reading however suggests itself namely بتقريب آنکه بسای الخ, instead of بتقريب آنکه. We should then translate: "And inasmuch as he had very many families with him obtained possession of the fort in the following manner."

⁹ Regarding the truth, etc. (See MS. Copy).

The climate of Bangāla proved so extremely suitable to Humāyūn, that he changed the name of Gaur to Jaunatābād (The realm of Paradise), and having halted there for (two or)¹ three months returned. In the meanwhile Shīr Khān's affair was assuming large proportions, and his following was increasing. He wrote a letter to Humāyūn, saying, 'all these Afghāns are the servants and retainers of His Majesty the King, and beg to be granted jāegīrs,² if the king will think about a jāegīr for them, then it will be well, but if not, hunger will drive them to open revolt. Up to the present time I have kept them in check, but now they no longer obey me, and the proverb is well-known. The hungry man will throw himself upon the sword. For the rest whatever the king says is law.'

Humāyūn, when he grasped the contents of the letter; saw clearly what its object was, and seeing that the opportunity had passed by,³ and considering the bareness of equipment and inefficiency⁴ of his army, which had recently been doubled, many horses and camels having died, while the remainder were so jaded and emaciated that they were of no use whatever, he set about devising some remedial measures. Mirzā Hindāl, who had accompanied the king as far as Mongīr, was despatched to Āgra to put down the rebellion⁵ of Muḥammad Sulṭān Mirzā, Ulugh Mirzā, and Shāh Mirzā, who had fled and had done great mischief in the Dihli country, and were now returning. Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā, after that Sulṭān Bahādūr was drowned in the sea owing to the treachery of the Firangīs,⁶ could not accomplish anything, and again sought refuge with Humāyūn.

Aḥmad Abūl-Abbās, son of Al-Muwaffiq b-Ilāh came up and opposed him, but not until Baṣra was ruined. Hence the proverb. See Arabian Proverbia. Freytag III, p. 129, No. 774.

And in the year 945 H. Mirzā Hindāl, at the instigation of certain turbulent innovators,¹ put to death Shaiḫ Buhlūl, the elder brother of Shaiḫ Muḥammad Ḡhaṣ of Gwālīār, who was one of the chief exponents of the art of invocation and incantation,² and who enjoyed the full confidence and friendship of Humāyūn. The year in which this event occurred was commemorated by the chronogram Faqāḍ māta Shāhidān.³ Verily he died a martyr's death.

Mirzā Hindāl in this year read the Khutbah in his own name in Āgra. Humāyūn despatched five thousand picked men to reinforce Jahāngīr Bēg the Mughūl, and making over the rule of that country to him, with permission to read the Khutbah should occasion arise, set out for Āgra, and, all unprepared as he was, reached Jausā,⁴ which is a village on the bank of the Ganges. The Amīrs of Jaunpūr and Chinnār came in and offered to tender their services. Shīr Khān seized the head of the road, and being aware of the distress of the army, placed between it and his own army a canal,⁵ which joined the Ganges, and, owing to the rains, was quite full of water, and for three months encamped over against the King. It is said that during this period when they were confronting each other, Humāyūn one day sent Mulla Muḥammad 'Azīz,¹ who was an old friend of Shīr Khān, as an ambassador.² Shīr Khān was at that moment with his sleeves³ rolled up, and with a spade in his hand, in spite of the heat, was busy preparing the fort and entrenchments.

When Mulla Muḥammad came near he washed his hands, and having ordered a shāmīāna ⁴ to be pitched, sat on the ground unceremoniously, and after hearing the King's message said, "Take this one message from me to the King and say: 'You yourself desire war, but your army does not, I on the other hand, do not desire war,⁵ but my army does: for the rest the decision is the King's.'"
Then he sent Shaikh Khalil,⁶ one of the descendants of the venerable Shaikh Farīd Ganj-i-Shakkar, may God sanctify his soul, who was the spiritual guide of Shīr Khān, to Humāyūn, and made overtures of peace to him, representing that he was willing to give up to Humāyūn's representatives the whole country with the exception of Bangāla, and would have the Khutbah and sikka established in Humāyūn's name. This agreement was ratified between them by an oath on the Divine Word, and Humāyūn's mind was at peace with regard to Shīr Khān.

A bridge was ordered to be thrown across: but Shīr Khān was plotting treachery and deceit.

Verse.

because out of craft,

In that room where they speak of peace the camel is clad in armour.

I flee from the camel of the heavens and the room of the earth,
Because there are maddened camels surrounding that room.

Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā was overwhelmed by the tempest of death, and Humāyūn urged his horse into the water and was in dread of drowning, in fact was on the point of drowning, when a water carrier³ came to his aid and rescued him from that whirlpool of destruction. Then he turned towards Āgra. Shīr Khān wrote⁴ 352. this verse upon that event:—

intending to capture Āgra. Kāmran Mirzā, prior to the affair of Jausā, after hearing of the victory of Shīr Khān and the rebellion of Mirzā Hindāl against Humāyūn, returned from Qandahār to Lāhor, and leaving there came to Āgra, which he reached in the year 946 H. Mirzā Hindāl himself, before the arrival of Mirzā Kāmran, in the absence of Humāyūn, laid siege to Dihli, in which Mir Fakhr 'Alī and Mirzā Yādgār Nāsir had fortified themselves; but not meeting with any success joined hands with Mirzā Kāmran. Mir Fakhr 'Alī also came in and had an interview with him, but Mirzā Yādgār Nāsir would not leave the fort. Eventually Mirzā Hindāl separating from Mirzā Kāmran proceeded to Alwar. When Humāyūn heard these tidings, he became still more despondent,¹ till that eventful defeat took place:² after the defeat at Jausā³ he proceeded by forced marches, accompanied by a few horsemen, and arrived unawares at the tent of Mirzā Kāmran in Āgra. The Mirzā also knew nothing of his coming; both brothers upon recognising each other burst into tears.⁴ Afterwards Hindāl Mirzā and Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā and his sons, who had for a time shewn hostility, came in and offered their submission for certain considerations: Their faults were pardoned and they sat in consultation. Mirzā Kāmran ostensibly had this intention, that, inasmuch as the army of the Panjāb had gathered fresh force, Humāyūn should grant him leave to proceed against Shīr Khān and endeavour to take vengeance on him, while the King should remain in ease and tranquillity at the Capital. When Humāyūn declined to accede to this proposal, the Mirzā put forward a claim to proceed to⁵ the Panjāb, and urged an infinity of reasons, giving colour to the suggestion that a refusal would cause him insupportable annoyance. Accordingly Humāyūn acceded⁶ to all his requests, saving only his return; and Khwāja Kalān Bāg was exerting his efforts to procure the return of Mirzā Kāmran to the Panjāb: so that this argument was carried on for six months and nothing was settled.⁷ In the meantime Mirzā Kāmran was taken ill with a complication of severe diseases,¹ and when the diagnosis was arrived at that the source of the disease was a poison, which had been poured into his life's cup by the hand of circumstance, he was led by the whisperings of interested advisers² to entertain suspicion against Humāyūn, and imagined that perhaps it was he who had administered³ poison to him. Ill as he was he returned to Lāhor, and in breach⁴ of his former agreement that he would leave the whole of his army at Āgra in the service of the king, took the whole of it⁵ with him, with the exception of two thousand men whom he left under the command of Sikandar. Mirzā Haidar the Mughul and Dughlāt⁶ Kashmiri also remained at Āgra, and were kindly treated. Shīr Khān waxed bold at the success of these hypocrisies, and towards the close of the year⁷ aforesaid reached the bank of the Ganges, and despatching a⁸ force under his son Quṭb Khān, sent him across [the Ganges]⁹ against Kalpi and Itāwa. Qāsim Husain Sultān Usbeg, in concert with Yādgar Nāṣir Mirzā and Iskandar Sultān, after a fight in the vicinity of Kālpi, put to death the son of Shīr Khān with a large number¹⁰ of his following, sending their heads to Āgra.

Humāyūn started to oppose Shīr Khān with a large force composed of some hundred thousand cavalry, and crossing the river of Qanauj encamped in face of his enemy for the space of one month. The army of Shīr Khān did not comprise in all more than five thousand¹¹ cavalry. It was under such circumstances that Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā and his son fled a second time from the king, and the reinforcements of Mirzā Kāmran also took flight to Lāhor, and the Mughuls of the King's army were scattered in all directions. The rains now came on, and inasmuch as the camp of Humāyūn's army was on low lying ground, he desired to march from there and encamp on the high ground. At this very time ¹ Shīr Khān drew up his troops, and came out to give battle. This engagement took place on the day of the 'Āshūra, the 10th of Muḥarram 947 H., and a chronogram was found for it in the words Kharābī-i-mulk-i-Dillī.² The greater number of the Mughul soldiers refused to fight³ and took to their heels, while a small body of them who engaged in fight, strove manfully in battle,⁴ but things had gone beyond control, and it was of no avail. The king rode off with the intention of going to the high ground. This action of his in itself afforded an excuse to his men to flee, and a serious defeat ensued. Moreover the king while crossing the river Ganges became separated from his horse, and by the help of Shamsu-d-Dīn Muḥammad of Ghaznī (who eventually became the foster-father of the prince's most excellent majesty, and was honoured in Hindūstān with the title of A'zam Khān),⁵ escaped from the water and returned to Āgra; but seeing that⁶ the enemy's army was coming up in pursuit, he could not remain there,⁷ so made his way to the Panjāb with all speed.

At the commencement of Rabi'ul-awwal of this year all the Sultāns and Amīrs of the Chaghatai tribe⁸ assembled for conference in Lāhor. Hypocrisy was still the order of the day, and Muḥammad Sultān and his sons fled from Lāhor to Multān, while Mirzā Hindāl and Mirzā Yādgar Nāṣir thought it advisable to proceed to Bhakkar and Tatta. prayed that this conference might speedily be dissolved so that he might go to Kābul. After long consultation Humāyūn sent Mirzā Ḥaidar with a large party who had accepted service in Kashmīr, to that district. It was agreed¹ that Khwāja Kalān Bēg should follow Mirzā Ḥaidar, and that Humāyūn himself also should proceed thither after the conquest of Kashmīr.

When Mirzā Ḥaidar arrived at Nausahra² which is a well-known place, he entered that country with the concurrence of certain Kashmīrīs and conquered it: and on the 22nd of Rajab of this same year he gained possession of that country. Khwāja Kalān Bēg had gone to Siālkoṭ. When tidings reached the king that Shīr Khān had crossed the river at Saltānpūr and had arrived within thirty krohs of Lāhor, Humāyūn, on the first of the month of Rajab in the aforesaid year, crossed the river of Lāhor, and Mirzā Kāmran, after breaking his solemn vows, agreed for certain reasons to accompany Humāyūn as far as the neighbourhood of Bahira, and Khwāja Kalān Bēg made forced marches from Siālkoṭ, and joined Humāyūn's camp. Mirzā Kāmran together with Mirzā 'Askari, separating³ from the king, proceeded in company with Khwāja Kalān Bēg towards Kābul, while Humāyūn proceeded towards Sind. Sultān Muḥammad. This was at the time when Sultān Ibrāhīm had taken the field at Pānīpath, and Bābar Padshāh had conquered Hindūstān and planted¹ the banner of sovereignty. Here he was well received, and as one day, when on a hunting expedition, he killed a tiger in the presence of Sultān Muḥammad, the title of Shīr Khān was bestowed upon him by the Sultān, who also appointed him to be tutor² to his son Jalāl Khān. After some time Muḥammad Khān Sūr, governor of the country of Chaund, made an attempt to turn Sultān Muḥammad against Shīr Khān, with the object of advancing the interest of his brothers, and having succeeded in getting an order from Sultān Muḥammad that the brothers were to have a share in the management of the parganas, sent Suleimān, son of Hasan Sūr who has been mentioned, accompanied by one of his servants named Shādi to Khawāspūr, and Bhaka the servant of Shīr Khān who was known as the father of Khawās Khān engaged in battle with Suleimān and was killed. The remainder fled, and came to Shīr Khān at Sahsarām. Shīr Khān had no longer the power to cope with Muḥammad Khān, nor the inclination to serve Sultān Muḥammad, he accordingly abandoned his position and jāegir, and having no other resource betook himself to Sultān Junaid Birlās, who was holding the Government of Karra and Mānikpūr on behalf of Bābar Padshāh.

359. He remained in his service, and after presenting many valuable offerings, obtained a fully equipped army as reinforcement from Sultān Junaid, and fought with Muḥammad Khān, wrested from him the parganas of Chaund and other parganas, and took possession of them. Muḥammad Khān fled, and took refuge in the fortress of Rohtās. Shīr Khān, having wreaked his vengeance on his brothers, made apologetic overtures to Muḥammad Khān, addressing him by the title of uncle; having thus earned his gratitude he handed over³ the parganas he held as jāegir to him on the same footing as formerly, and leaving Nizām his full brother in charge of the jāegīr, went again to Sultān Junaid, whom he found just starting to pay his respects to Bābar Padshāh. Taking Shīr Khān with him, Junaid enrolled him among the servants and well-wishers of the king's court. He accompanied Bābar on the expedition to Chanderī. In accordance with Mughūl habits and customs, and owing to the carelessness of the king in his management of the affairs of State, and the venality of the revenue-officers, and the utter disorder into which the affairs of the people had fallen, matters came to such a pass that if any person¹ had an object in view, he could quickly bring it to pass.² One day Bābar on the occasion of a banquet, observed him behave in a way which deserved the royal censure,³ and demanded the punishment of Shīr Khān. Those who were present at the banquet related the particulars of his independence and arrogant assumption, not omitting to mention some of his double-dealings. Shīr Khān accordingly became apprehensive of danger, and fled from the king's camp to his parganas, whence he wrote a letter couched in apologetic terms and sent it to Sultān Junaid, advancing as a pretext to cover his return,⁴ that since Muḥammad Khān was led by feelings of hostility against him to induce Sultān Muḥammad to send⁵ an army against Shīr Khān's parganas because of his being in service with the Mughūls, and as he could not easily and quickly⁶ obtain leave of absence from Bābar, he had accordingly taken this liberty and had at all hazards determined to rejoin those who wished well to the Sultān. Thence he proceeded to Sultān Muḥammad, where he was honoured by increased confidence and by suitable rewards, and was once more installed as custodian of his younger son Jalāl Khān, whose whole affairs he took under his own management. After the death of Sultān Muḥammad, he obtained absolute control of the whole country of Bihār and its dependencies.

of Bangāla, who despatched an Amir named Quṭb Khān to undertake the overthrow of Maḥdūm 'Ālam. Shīr Khān marched to the aid of Maḥdūm 'Ālam, and¹ after a fierce battle put Quṭb Khān to death, taking as spoil elephants and treasure and many followers. Jalāl Khān and his tribe, who are Lūhānis,² in spite of Shīr Khān, made over Bihār to the ruler of Bangāla and elected to serve under him, and leaving Shīr Khān to his fate, took care to secure their own safety.

The Bangālīs in the first instance sent Ibrāhīm Khān, the son of the Quṭb Khān above mentioned, against Shīr Khān to wreak vengeance upon him. Shīr Khān used daily to fight with them from within the fort, but since the Bangālīs received large reinforcements, and no way of retreat remained open to him, he yielded to necessity and fought a battle with them in the open³ in which he gained the day. Ibrāhīm Khān also seeing what had occurred went and joined his father, and Shīr Khān seized the whole of the camp of the Bangālīs⁴ with their elephants and artillery, acquiring thereby great renown, so that he established a lasting and undivided control over the country of Bihār and raised himself to the dignity of a Sultān. He next wrested the fortress of Chinār together with its vast treasures from the sons of [Jamāl Khān Sārang-Khān⁵]⁶ Tāj Khān, one of the Amirs of Sultān Ibrāhīm Lodi, who some years before had regained possession of it, and took in marriage his wealthy and beautiful wife who had vast stores of treasure. This fact also enhanced his grandeur and dignity, so that the desire for sovereignty daily gained more ascendancy over his mind, till at last certain powerful Amirs of the Afghān Lodi faction summoned from Chitor Sultān Maḥmūd, son of Sultān Sikandar Lodi, who, after raising Ḥasan Khān Miwātī and Rānā Sānkā to royal power, had induced him to fight with Bābar Pādshāh, and subsequently to his defeat⁷ had remained in the fortress of Chitor, and seated him upon the throne in Patna.⁸ He accordingly came with a vast army and invaded the country of Bihār, and wresting it from Shīr Khān took possession of it. Sultān Maḥmūd passing by Sahsarām, after writing and making over to Shir Khān an agreement relating to Bihār,¹ thereby raising his hopes, despatched him to attempt the conquest of Jaunpūr and to engage in war with the Amirs of Humāyūn Pādshāh. He thus brought the whole of that province as far as Lakhnau into his own² power. The Amirs of Humāyūn Pādshāh could not stand against (Shir Khān), and proceeding to Kālinjar³ gave in their allegiance to him. Humāyūn marched to oppose Sultān Maḥmūd, and Baban and Bāyazid,⁴ who were with him.⁵ When the two armies met Shir Khān, who had stood aloof from Sultān Maḥmūd for some days, again joined his force, and sent a message to Mir Hindū Bēg Qūchīn, Commander-in-chief of the Mughl army, saying that on the day of the battle he would make a flank movement and stand on one side. You and the Afghāns, said he, well know how utterly I abhor and detest the command of Sultān Maḥmūd and Baban⁶ and Bāyazid.

Eventually he did as he had arranged, and Sultān Maḥmūd and Baban⁷ being defeated retired to the country of Patna, and made no further attempts to fight, till in the year 949 H. (1542 A. D.) in the country of Orissa⁸ he encamped on the frontiers of the desert of non-existence, and having gone to the appointed goal remained at rest. Humāyūn Pādshāh [after this victory]⁹ sent Mir Hindū Bēg as his agent to Shir Khān with a demand to him to yield up the fort of Chinār. He, however, made some lame excuse, so the king ordered several noted Amirs to precede him and lay siege to that fortress, himself also ¹ preparing to follow them. In the meanwhile Shir Khān wrote a petition in which he pointed out his own sincerity and the favour shewn him by Baban, and recounted the deserving nature of his former services, more specially his opposition to Baban and Bāyazid. This petition he sent by the hand of Qutb Khān, his eldest son, together with a large force, to Humāyūn Pādshāh. He sent also with Qutb Khān, 'Isā Khān Hajjāb, who was his vakīl with the powers of a vazīr, and he fleeing from Gujrāt joined his father in Bangāla. When Humāyūn Pādshāh altered his course towards Gujrāt, Shir Khān himself had risen to great dignity and power, so that he engaged in open battle with Humāyūn on two occasions, and gained the day, as has already been mentioned. Shir Shāh in the early part of the year of his accession laid waste the ancient city of Qannanj, and moving it from its original site re-established it on the banks of the river Ganges; it is now known as Shirgarh. In the same manner he destroyed the fortress of Shamsābād and removed it to another place, calling it by the name of Rusūlpūr. Now, however, at the date of writing, it has been repopulated in its old position. And when he arrived at old Dihli, which was founded by Sultān 'Alāud-Dīn, he destroyed that also, and established between the fortress of Dinpanāh, which Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh constructed, and ² Firozābād, an extensive city, and built round ³ that fort a rampart of stone and mortar, having an extent of three krohs. On his arrival at Sultānpūr by continuous marches, the brothers of Humāyūn Pādshāh and the Chaghatai Amirs quarrelled, and each took his own way as has been described, and Shir Shāh himself, ⁴ not giving them time to reassemble, came up in pursuit. In this year he issued a public proclamation that from the country of Bangāla as far as western Rohtās, which is a four months' journey, and also from Āgra to Mandū, ⁵ at every kroh a sarāi (rest-house) and a mosque, and a well built of burned bricks was to be established and a Muazzin ⁶ and an Imām. ⁷ A Musulmān

On both sides of the road also, large and lofty trees were planted in avenues, so that all travellers might go along in the shade of them. Traces of these still remain in most places up to the present time, though fifty-two years have passed since then. In his reign justice was so widespread that if, for example, an old man holding a golden tray in his hand had lain down to sleep whenever he felt inclined, no thief or ruffian would have dared to take it away from him.

After that Shīr Shāh reached the hill-country of Bālnāt. He built there the fortress of Rohtās as a protection for the army of Hindūstān against the Mughūl forces. Then he appointed Khawāṣṣ Khān to undertake the pursuit, and returned. While on the march he heard that a commander named Khizr Khān Sarak had become infatuated with rebellious notions and was behaving as though he were a Sultān. Shīr Shāh² accordingly bent his course thither, and Khizr Khān hastening to encounter him was taken prisoner. Shīr Shāh took possession of that country and conferred it by way of jāegīr upon several of his Amīrs, and appointed to the superintendence of the fort of Rohtās,³ Qāzī Faḡīlat the Qāzī of the army, who was popularly known by the more appropriate title of Qāzī Faḡīhat.⁴

In the year 948 H. he came⁵ to Āgra, and in the year 949 H. proceeded to Gwālīār with the intention of conquering Mālwa.⁶ Abūl Qāsim Beg, one of the Amīrs of Humāyūn Pādshāh who had entrenched himself in that fortress, came in and had an interview

Mallū Khān the governor of Mālwa, who ¹ was one of the slaves of the Khilji Sultāns, and held absolute and unlimited power in that province, offered his services to Shīr Shāh, and was honoured by splendid rewards. Shīr Shāh also had tents pitched for him close to his own tent, and prepared a hundred and one horses and other apparatus of pomp and dignity in his honour. In the meantime a suspicion arose in Mallū Khān's mind, and one night he tore his tent and escaped alone after the accustomed manner of slaves, and fled. Shīr Khān wrote the following:—

Verse.

You see how the chicken-hearted slave Mallū has treated me
It is a saying of Muṣṭafā "There can be no good in a slave."

Shīr Khān then nominated Hāji Khān Sultānī to the subjugation of the province of Mālwa, and Sazāwal Khān ² to administer the affairs of the district of Sawās; ³ Mallū Khān fought with Hāji Khān and Sazāwal Khān, and suffered a defeat from which he never recovered.

Gets such a fall that he can never again rise.

And Khān-i-Khānān Sarwānī, ⁴ who was the ⁵ permanent Governor of the fort of Ranthambūr, yielded up that fortress to Shīr Shāh and came with his family to the township of Basāwar. It is said that some one introduced some poison into his cup. His tomb is in the suburbs of that township, in a pleasant spot, and is well-known at this time: 366

Their women and men either⁶ became food for the edge (junhar) of the sword or fed the flames of the fire called jūhar, a well-known word in the Hindi language. This chronicle, from that day forward, remained as a record upon the pages of Time, may God be merciful to its author. This event occurred in the year 950 H., and⁷ after some time he girded up his loins for a holy war to uproot the pestilent infidels of the country of Mārwar, and led a vast⁸ army against *Rāi Maldeo*⁹

the leader of the Rāis of Hindūstān who held sway over the country of Nāgor and Jaunpūr, and was a powerful opponent of the Muslims; and inasmuch as one of the maxims of Shīr Shāh, from which he never departed,¹ was to throw up an entrenched position round his army, no matter how few the enemy might be, as soon as Māldeo arrived in the vicinity of Ājmir with fifty thousand picked cavalry trained and experienced in war, intent upon slaying or being slain, and confronted Shīr Shāh, he, finding it impossible to make trenches and ramparts because of the sandy soil, held a conference with his experienced and veteran Amīrs. No one of them however could devise a way to effect that object. Suddenly Maḥmūd Khān, the son of 'Ādil Khān,² who was grandson to Shīr Shāh, notwithstanding his youth said, "Let Shāh 'Ālam order the banjāras (grain sellers) of the army to fill sacks with sand and arrange them round³ the army." This idea⁴ highly commended itself to Shīr Shāh, and he immediately placed his turban upon the lad's head, and bestowed upon him in perpetuity the treaty territories.

In the end Heaven did not favour his designs, and Islām Shāh⁵ after reaching kingly power, made this unfortunate boy the very first of his family, heirs to the kingdom, to have his name blotted out from the page of existence, in accordance with the saying *Al mulku 'uḡīn*⁶ (The kingdom has no heir), and that treatment which he meted out to them, vindictive Time measured again to his posterity.

his army in calamity with the ignorant, boar natured, currish¹ Hindūs. Accordingly he devised an artifice, and wrote fictitious letters purporting to emanate from the generals of Māldeo's army, to himself, couched in enigmatical language,² the substance of them being that there would be no need for the king in person to superintend the fighting, when the armies were drawn up for battle, because they themselves would take Māldeo alive and deliver him up, upon the condition that such and such places should be given them as a reward. Having done this he so arranged that those letters fell into Māldeo's hands, with the result that Māldeo became utterly suspicious of all his generals,³ and, in the dead of night⁴ fled alone without looking behind him; and, notwithstanding that his generals denied their complicity with oath upon oath, saying that they never could have been guilty of such dastardly conduct,⁵ and that this was all the handiwork of Shīr Shāh in his desire to raise dissensions⁶ between them, it was of no use, and had no effect upon Māldeo's mind. Kanhaiyā,⁷ who was his minister and agent, abused Māldeo in violent terms, and taking four thousand resolute men devoted to death, or even more than this number, came down upon the army of Shīr Shāh, with the intention of surprising them by night, but missed his way, and after marching the whole night, when morning broke became aware that he had left the camp far in rear.⁸ After striving to the utmost of their powers, when they had abandoned all hope of life, at the very moment when the army of Shīr Shāh came in sight, as a result of their own stupidity, by the good luck of Shīr Shāh or by the superior good fortune of Islām, the infidels in a body dismounted from their horses, and renewing their vows of singleness of purpose and

He accordingly ordered the elephant troops to advance and³ trample them down. In rear of the elephants, the artillery and archers gave them a taste of the bowstring, and admitting them to the banquet of death, gave them the hospitality of the land of extinction. The bright surface of the world's page was polished, and freed from the dark lines of the land of infidels, and not one of the infidels got off with his life, nor was a single Muslim lost in that encounter.⁴ A poet of Basāwar, whose takhalluṣ is Faizī,⁵ wrote this verse on that subject.

375. Shāh, and the son of Mulla Aḥmad Junaid,¹ who is well known,² found this verse of the sacred word:³ "And already we have written in the Psalms, after the admonition that 'the earth shall my righteous servants inherit,'"⁴ to give the date of his accession. He wrote a despatch to his elder brother 'Ādil Khān and sent it to him in Ranthambūr, of which the following is the substance. "Although the succession was really your right, still as you were at so great a distance there was a danger, nay a certainty of the occurrence of disturbances here before you could arrive. Accordingly with a view to keep down insurrections, I will take charge of the army for a few days as your deputy, and after you arrive I shall have no alternative but to submit to and obey you." Leaving Kālinjar he made for⁵ Āgra and in the vicinity of the township of Kūra Khātampūr,⁶ Khawāṣṣ Khān arrived from Sihhind which was his jāegir, and yielded a forced allegiance, because he was more inclined to favour the accession of 'Ādil Khān as compared with Islem Shāh; a splendid banquet was held and he was anew placed on the throne. Afterwards when fresh despatches from Islem Shāh reached 'Ādil Khān, he referred the question of his coming to the following four persons upon whose advice and opinion as to its expediency he made his action dependent: Quṭb Khān Naib, 'Isā Khān Niyāzi, Khawāṣṣ Khān, and Jalāl Khān Jilwānī,⁷ all of whom were great Amirs, men of eminence belonging to his family. Islem Shāh sent this body of men to him bearing an agreement by which he undertook to allow 'Ādil Khān to depart to his jāegir after the first interview, and to deliver to his control any place in Hindūstān which he might select. Islem Shāh had plotted treachery against 'Ādil Khān, and had consequently made a stipulation that not more than two or three persons should be left in the fort with 'Ādil Khān. This however was not carried out, and a large body of followers accompanied him; accordingly Islem Shāh was constrained, in order to avoid suspicion, to treat 'Ādil Khān with extraordinary³ fawning and flattery, saying "I have taken care of these unruly⁴ Afghans so far by artful means,⁵ now I make them over to you."

Subject the intoxicated and riotous one to the warning glance of the cup-bearer.⁶

Having placed him upon the throne he himself assumed an attitude of submission and obedience, and from motives of worldly wisdom was most punctilious in the observance of courtesy.⁷ Although 'Ādil Khān was in the flower of his youth, and of great bodily strength (many well-known tales of his strength are told), nevertheless, since he was fond of ease, and was well aware of the craft and subtlety of Islem Shāh and his⁸ ways of dealing, would not agree to that procedure, rose to his feet, and seating Islem Shāh on the throne again with all honour and ceremony,⁹ swore allegiance to him, and offered him congratulations upon his accession, with the customary offerings¹⁰ and oblations. Islem Shāh, in accordance with the compact which had been made,¹¹ sent 'Īsa Khān and Khawāss Khān to accompany 'Ādil Khān, and having confirmed Baiāna to him as a jācgyr, permitted him to proceed thither. Two months later he appointed Ghāzi Mahalli, who was one of his confidential attendants, to go and arrest 'Ādil Khān.

It so chanced that 'Adil Khān and Khawāṣṣ Khān, having arrived at Sikrī on the Shab-i-barāt,⁶ spent that night as a vigil in the service of Shaikh Salim Chishtī, in voluntary prayers⁷ and benedictions, so that their departure for Āgra was delayed long past the time agreed upon, and it was breakfast time⁸ when they reached the outskirts of Āgra. 'Isā Khān Hajjāb warned him of the folly and absurdity of this project, and prevented him from sending his Amīrs to his enemy and from starting for Chunār. Eventually Islem Shāh, accompanied by a party of his own bodyguard, and two or three thousand old and trusty retainers, left Āgra with all haste and came out in force to fight, first recalling those Amīrs¹ whom he had sent,² saying "I am by no means confident that 'Ādil Khān will not deal treacherously with you; you had better return quickly and rejoin me, because the question between³ him and me can only be settled by the sword."

The Amīrs, however, who were friendly to 'Ādil Khān, on seeing Islem Shāh take the field, refused⁵ to return to his side and entered the ranks of the more powerful army; a severe battle ensued before Āgra, and 'Ādil Khān was defeated⁶ and fled alone toward Bhatta.⁷ Khawāṣs Khān and 'Isā Khān Niyāzi, who had a strong regard and unbounded loyalty for each other, took the road to Miwāt and the township of Firūzpūr, engaged the force which had been sent in pursuit of them, and overcame it; but eventually, not having power to resist the army of Islem Shāh, proceeded to the hills to the north of Hindūstān, which⁸ are called (the) Kumāon (hills), and took refuge with the Rājās of that district. Quṭb Khān Nāib, having been appointed to attack them, kept continually ravaging the country at the foot of the hills. Qutb Khān also took fright, and fled from the foot of the Kumāon hills to Lahore, taking refuge with Haibat Khān, to whom Shīr Shāh had given the title of A'zam Humāyūn. Haibat Khān in obedience to a summons from² Islem Shāh, sent Qutb Khān in chains to him. He mentioned the names of some whom he recognized. Previously to this he had thrown⁴ the abovementioned Amīrs, men of ability, into a chamber in Gwālīār, and setting fire to it with gunpowder had burned them all except Kawāl Khān Ghakkar, who remained under the protection of the Ail-cherisher safe in a corner of the room.⁵ [It is said that the following was the reason of his escaping; the sister of Kawāl Khān, who had been united by marriage to Islem Shāh, became aware of the conference and sent word to her brother, saying: This very night they intend to blow up the prisoners with gunpowder. She also sent from inside (the palace) four quilts stuffed with cotton, and several skins of water. Kawāl Khān poured quantities of water upon the quilts, and under pretence of taking a bath betook himself into a corner, apart from his friends, and rolling himself up in the quilts had gone to sleep when they set fire to the room, and all were burned to ashes, but he alone remained alive beneath the quilt. In the morning Islem Shāh came to inspect that prison house, and seeing Kawāl Khān alive said: It is right for me to release you seeing that fire had no power over you].⁶ Then Islem Shāh having made him⁷ take an oath that he would never again oppose him, released him, and appointed him to assist the Governor of the Panjāb to conquer the country of the Ghakkars [where he arrived with all honour].⁸ In short Sa'id Khān, who had been a witness of this sudden death, gave orders in obedience to which post horses were tied up along the road to Lāhor, so that he travelled the distance between Āgra and Lāhor within three nights. Day by day the scale turned more and more in favour of the Niyāzi faction, and Ā'zam Humāyūn read the Khutbah in his own name in Lāhor. Islem Shāh returned from that same camp and came to Āgra, and summoning a vast army from all sides marched for the Panjāb. Sazāwal Khān came from Mālwa to join this movement, and was received very graciously, and after bringing forward certain important matters took leave, while Islem Shāh, after halting for a few days in Dihli and ordering his army, set out for Lāhor.¹ Ā'zam Humāyūn and Khawāṣṣ Khān, and 'Isā Khān² Niyāzi as well, (who had come down from the hill country to join him), came from the Panjāb with armies strong as the hills to receive Islem Shāh. It appears that the Niyāzi faction said,⁶ The kingdom is not by inheritance, but *He who conquers, takes the booty.*⁷ It is a foregone conclusion, what sense is there in this that we should strike with the sword and the kingdom should come to others.

And Sa'id Khān, the elder brother of Ā'zam Humāyūn, attended by a body of men fully armed and equipped, disguised in such a way that no one would know him, came in under the pretext of offering congratulations, with the intention of putting an end to Islem Shāh, and with that object asked repeatedly, where is the Pādshāh that I may offer him my congratulations on his victory. An elephant driver of one of those elephants which had surrounded Islem Shāh recognised the voice of Sa'id Khān, and struck a blow at him with his spear, but he³ made his way in safety through the crowd of elephants, great as it was,⁴ and foiled in his purpose made his escape; the Niyāzī faction fled and came to Dhankot,⁵ which is near Roh,⁶ and the remainder were plundered by the Kawārs, while some were drowned in the nullahs of Ambāla. Islem Shāh pursued as far as Western Rohās, and despatched Khawāja Wais⁷ Sirwānī with a large army to oppose the Niyāzīs, and returned towards Āgra. Leaving Āgra he went⁸ to Gwāliār, and made it his capital.⁹ When Khawāṣṣ Khān and 'Isā Khān Niyāzī, who had made common cause, left the battle field, 'Isā Khān went to the hill country,¹⁰ [while Khawāṣṣ Khān with five or six hundred cavalry¹¹ fled to Lāhor]; [and (Islām Khān)¹² Islem Shāh appointed Shams Khān

And in the year 954 H. (1547 A.D.) an Afghān named Uṣmān, whose hand Sazāwal Khān had cut off for some reason, one day laid an ambush in Āgra, and at the entrance to a road aimed a blow at Sazāwal Khān and wounded him. Sazāwal Khān went to the camp, and represented that this attack had been made at the instance of Salīm Shāh, he then took his way to Mālwa. Islem Shāh pursued him as far as Bānswāla, but seeing that Sazāwal Khān was hidden among the Zamindārs of Sarūr,³ Salīm Shāh left 'Īsa Khān Sūr with twenty thousand cavalry in Ujjain, and reached the capital. In the early part of his reign 334. Islem Shāh detailed five thousand cavalry for the chief sarkārs of Hindūstān. Among them Mubārīz Khān, the son of Nizām Khān⁴ Sūr, who was the cousin and wife's brother of Islem Shāh, and eventually received the title of Muḥammad 'Adili, was appointed as a commander of twenty thousand to the vicinity of Ajāwan in the Sarkār of Sanbal, in order that Khawāṣṣ Khān and the other Amīrs might not be able to raise disturbances in that province, and he appointed as his deputy Pābandh Khazak.⁵ He had also given orders at the beginning of his reign, that between every two resthouses built by Shir Shāh, which were at intervals of one kroh, another rest-house of the same pattern should be built, with a temple, and a dwelling-place, and a conduit for water, and that a buttery and kitchen containing food both cooked and uncooked, for the use of travellers,⁶ both Hīndū and Musulmān, should be Among other commands of his was this, that the *madad-i-ma'ash*¹ and aimah grants of the whole of the protected² provinces of Hindūstān which Shīr Shāh had given, and the rest-houses which he had furnished, and the pleasure-gardens he had laid out,³ should remain just as they were, and should not be altered in the slightest degree. Another order was, that all the *Pātars*⁴ should be taken by force from those Amirs who kept Akhāras (these are well known in Hindūstān). He also seized⁵ the elephants in the same manner, and did not leave in the possession of any one any but a wretched female elephant fit only for carrying baggage, and gave⁶ orders that the red tent was confined solely to his own use. Another order was this, that he brought the whole country under his own personal control,⁷ and in accordance with the regulations and custom of the dāghī system⁸ which Shīr Shāh had instituted, the soldiery were paid in cash. A further step was to send written orders to all the Sarkārs containing comprehensive instructions on all important points of religion, and all political and civil questions,⁹ entering into the minutest essential detail,¹⁰ and dealing with all regulations which might be of service to the soldiery and civil population, to the merchants and other various classes, and which the authorities were bound to follow in their jurisdiction.

Also the Amirs of five thousand, ten thousand, and twenty thousand, used every Friday to pitch a lofty tent supported by eight poles,¹ and bring the shoes of Salim Shāh together with a quiver which he had given to the *sardārs*² in front of the throne; and first of all the commander of the troops, and after him the Munṣif, that is to say, the Chief Commissioner (Amīn) followed by the others in due precedence, with bowed heads and every expression of respect would take their seats in their appointed places. Then a Secretary would come and read aloud that order, chapter and verse, which occupied eighty sheets of paper more or less. Any question which presented any difficulty was referred by them in conclave to the various provisions and rulings of that document, by which it was finally decided, and if it should so happen that any Amir acted in contravention of that order, the Secretary used to write a report of that action and despatch it to the Court, and the disobedient Amir would forthwith be visited with punishment together with his family and relations. This procedure remained in force to the end of the reign of Islem Shāh. The writer of this Muntakhab, in the year 955 H. Islem Shāh dishonoured them, and made over to the harlots in his camp the banners and tents and all the tokens of dignity of the Niyāzīs who had fallen into his hands, and naming one Sa'id Khān, and another Ā'zam² Humāyūn, and a third Shāhbāz Khān, in this way he distributed titles. Moreover he gave them drums which they used to play at their doors at the time of the naubat,³ and the prostitutes used to give themselves airs⁴ and used to say Sag-i-falakam.⁵ This class used to come every Thursday evening, in accordance with the custom of the harlots of Hindūstān, to pay their respects to Islem Shāh, and the heralds and chamberlains used to call out with a loud voice, O King cast a gracious glance hither, for a certain Khān Niyāzī, and Bahmān Khān are here to invoke blessings on thee. This used to annoy the Afghāns who were all of one tribe and of one mind, so that an intense disgust for him had sprung up in their hearts. Some assert that his conferring the titles of the Niyāzīs and giving the ensigns and drums was on the first occasion.⁶ God knows the truth. And Ā'zam Humāyūn, who on the second occasion was defeated, was not able to gird himself again to war, and the Niyāzī party being scattered asunder grew daily weaker, and at first took refuge with the Ghakkars in the neighbourhood of Rohtās, making the hill country adjoining the Kashmīr territory their asylum. Islem Shāh, in order to remove the cause of the mischief, marched with a large army, and reaching the Panjāb took up a strong position in the northern hill range, and by way of guarding his head-quarter post built five two years he kept the Afghāns¹ employed in carrying stone and lime, and had such a hatred of the whole tribe that he heaped² the dust of infamy and oppression on their heads. At this time he did not give them even the smallest coin³ by way of recompense. A party of them, however, who had obtained exemption from this labour,⁴ he detailed to oppose the Ghakkars, and they engaged in continuous warfare with them.

The Ghakkars in appearance like the tribe of 'Ād,⁵ daily fought with the Afghāns, and by night entered their camp like thieves, and used to carry off whomsoever they might find, woman or man, freed man or slave, and keep them in bonds with the utmost rigour, and sell them. The Afghāns⁶ dragged them in the dirt, and gave them the nickname of Ruswāi (disgraced), but no one had the power to represent this state of things to Islem Shāh till at last one day Shāh Muḥammad Farmālī,⁷ who was one of the most noted Amīrs for wit and good-humour in Hindūstān, and was also a specially favoured and forward boon companion said, "My Lord the King! Last night I saw in a dream three bags descend from heaven, in one of which was dust, in another gold, and in the third⁸ paper. The dust fell upon the head of a soldier, the gold went to the house of the Hindū daftārī,⁹ and the paper remained in the royal treasury." Islem Shāh was pleased with this speech, and promised that after his return to Gwālīār he would make his accountants draw up an account of the soldiers' pay, and pay them in gold. As it happened that order was never carried out, for in those same days death seized him by the collar.

their strength¹ was broken, and they came into Kashmir, the Kashmiris, who are² born traitors and deceivers, first of all invited the Niyāzis from Rājūrī after inflaming them with spurious ambition for kingdom, and in the end their guides leading them astray³ brought the tribes of Kashmir to oppose them, and at a hint from Islem Shāh held the head of the pass against them. The women even of the Niyāzis in defence of their honour girded on quivers, (among them were the mother and wife of Āzam Humāyūn),⁴ and fighting with the Kashmiris were attacked by a hail of stones which literally covered them, and not a soul escaped. It is said that in the reign of Shīr Shāh a body of the Afghāns of the tribe of Sanbal invited the Niyāzis to Dhankot under treaty, and put two thousand of them to death in obedience to the orders of Shīr Shāh, putting their wives and children to the sword. Five years later the same thing happened to them,⁵ and in this house of retribution they received the reward of their deeds, hand for hand. And⁶ in these narrow passes they put all three brothers to the sword, sending their heads as an offering to Salim Shāh. They also sent for him a girl from there. A part of this story has been elegantly told in the Tārīkh-i-Kashmīr,⁷ the composition of which is ancient though its arrangement is modern; and at the time when Islem Shāh, had sent troops against the Ghakkars and the Jānoha party who were strongly entrenched on the banks of the river Behat, he himself was occupied in building the fortress of Māngarh;⁸ and Kāmran Mirzā, after fighting many battles with⁹ Muḥammad Humāyūn Padshāh, fled from Kābul and took refuge with Salim Shāh, in the hopes that he would give him reinforcements which would enable him to capture Kābul, in the (vain) expectation that the water which had flowed away would return¹⁰ to its source. When Islem Shāh heard this tidings, he selected from his army the notorious Humūn¹¹ Baqqāl, who in those days, in virtue of his capacity for extorting taxes, had been promoted from being overseer of the market to a post of confidence, and sent him with another body of Afghāns to the neighbourhood of Rohtās to meet Mirzā, and although Islem Shāh in his own mind thought this a reason for increased confidence in Mirzā, being led to this by the want of confidence¹ he had in the Afghāns as a tribe, and the entire trust he reposed in Humān, still Mirzā himself made light of this, and² recognising that there were dregs in the very first draught of the cup was unwilling to come in person.

Verse.

Now indeed thou repentest but thy repentance profiteth thee nothing.

Nevertheless, in spite of this Mirzā still believed that possibly Islem Shāh would overlook everything, and would treat him with honour and respect when the time of meeting arrived. However, on the day of public audience, he himself entered with arrogant assurance, and sitting on the seat of a Fara'un or a Shaddād,³ gave orders to Sarmast Khān⁴ the Afghān, a Dā'ūd Za'ī,⁵ who held the office of Bārbak,⁶ in accordance with which he directed Mirzā to perform the customary salutations like the servants of the ordinary public. He accordingly performed the Kornish,⁷ and those diabolical men⁸ out of sheer inhumanity seized Mirzā roughly by the nape of the neck, and shouted aloud several times saying, Your Majesty!⁹ Be pleased to cast a glance hither, for Kāmran the Muqaddam-zāda of Kābul invokes blessings. Islem Shāh after ignoring him for some considerable time, cast a haughty glance in the direction of Mirzā,¹⁰ and uttered a hypocritical "Welcome." He then ordered a tent and canopy to be erected for Mirzā near to his own tent, and bestowed upon him a horse and a robe of honour, and a slave girl and a eunuch so that they might spy into his affairs. He used also to summon the Mirzā from time to time, and hold converse with him regarding poetry, but their intercourse was always disagreeable, and the Mirzā was worried by those incessant ceremonial visits and shew of politeness, till he grew sick of his life, and was watching a favourable opportunity to make his escape. Moreover the Afghāns used to make jibes¹ at him in the Hindi tongue, and when he appeared in darbār used to say² *Moro mi āyad*³ (Here comes the peacock). The Mirzā enquired from one of the attendants, in the presence of Islem Shāh, "What do they mean by Moro?" He answered, "It is the name they give⁴ to a man of great dignity." The Mirzā replied,⁵ "At that rate Salim Shāh is a first rate Moro and Shīr Shāh was a still finer." Salim Shāh consequently gave orders that no one was ever to use that word again,⁶ nor to indulge in pleasantries at the Mirzā's expense. At last one day Islem Shāh called upon the Mirzā for a verse of poetry, when the Mirzā recited this maṭla' off hand:

Gardish-i-gardūn-i-gardān gardanānrā gard kard
*Bar sar-i-ṣāhib-tamizān nūqīṣān rā marḍ kard.*⁷

The revolutions of the circling heaven have brought low the mighty,
 And have made worthless men to lord it over men of intelligence.

Islem Shāh fully caught the meaning of this verse, and gave secret orders to his attendants to keep the Mirzā under open arrest. The Mirzā, however, by the help of the zamīndārs,⁸ made an arrangement with one of the hill Rājas, and persuaded him, by holding out inducements of various kinds, to station post-

The Mirzā crossed the river with his horse and saddle and succeeded in reaching the Rāja. From there he proceeded alone clothed in a *burqa*², and taking a *jilaudār*³ with him, was escorted⁴ by some of the Rājas' subjects till he arrived in the vicinity of the village of Ghari Khū,⁵ on the bank of the river Behat, and rested there one night. Inasmuch as that village is near Sultānpūr the residence of Sultān Ādam Ghakkar, at a distance of three krohs from the fortress of Rohtās, some one went to Sultān Ādam and informed him that a Mughāl woman was encamped at such and such a place, attended only by one jilaudār and that her intention was to proceed on the following morning. Sultān Ādam sent messengers to make enquiries, and then proceeded⁶ in person, and had an interview with the Mirzā, who by persistent entreaty prevailed upon him to give a promise that he would send him in safety to a place of refuge. Sultān Ādam accordingly wrote a letter to Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh, who had recently arrived in that neighbourhood, begging him to spare the Mirzā's life.⁷

The Pādshāh wrote an order in accordance with this request⁸ of his, and sent it to him; but eventually, two years later, he again seized the Mirzā, and⁹ after blinding him with a lancet

The word nishṭar records the date of this occurrence.¹ These incidents have only been briefly alluded to here, because they are related² fully in the Akbar Nāma and the (Tārīkh-i-) Nizāmī.³ Among the events which took place during the reign of Islem Shāh was the affair of Shāh Muḥammad of Dihli, of which the following is a brief account. Shāh Muḥammad, in the reign of Shēr Shāh, had come from the country of 'Irāq⁴ to Hindūstān, and had given himself out⁵ to be a Saiyyid. There was some hesitation among the people as to this claim; however, he used to live in accordance with the customs⁶ of the Shaiḫs and holy men, and was acquainted with the science of invocation of the mighty names,⁷ and was not without an admixture of deceit.⁸ 392.

Verse.

What is expected of Shaiḫs is the performance of miracles and prayer-stations.

Whereas what we really see in them are ecstatic⁹ and incoherent ravings.

In spite of all, Shēr Shāh gave him credit for being a wālī, and Islem Shāh¹⁰ also had reposed great confidence in him from the time he was a prince, and used to go and do reverence to him, and as is the custom of kings, used to take omens¹¹ concerning (his accession to) the kingdom, and from the excessively high opinion he had of him used to lift (the Saiyyid's) shoes. The story goes that one day they had brought a basket¹² of melons as a present to Shāh Muḥammad and just then¹³ Islem Shāh arrived. The Saiyyid pointed to Islem Shāh and said, I present you with this basket confident in its being as a royal umbrella to you,¹ rise, and place it on your head and be gone. Islem Shāh without hesitation lifted the basket accepted it as a lucky omen and took his departure.

How good it is to take a lucky omen,

Not to strike one's cheek (in grief) but to give mate with the rook.²

But eventually this matter became a source of annoyance to him³ as is generally the case. At all events, when Islem Shāh succeeded to the kingdom, during his reign two Saiyyids of good birth, men of ascetic habit, clean-living, dignified, and agreeable, one of whom was named Amīr Abū⁴ Tālib who was the inferior, and the other named Mir Shamsu-d-Dīn who was his superior and brother's son to him, arrived from the country of 'Irāq at the camp of Islem Shāh in the Panjāb, and came to Dihlī, where they took up their abode in one of the quarters of the city, and were resorted to by all classes. Amīr Abū Tālib was so marvellously skilled in the abstruse science of medicine, that the majority of the sick who came under his treatment obtained cures, and used to bring him presents and offerings in return, to say nothing of perquisites.⁵ A report was spread that he was in possession of the ring of 'Alī,⁶ may God be satisfied with him, one of the properties of which was that no one who was suspected (of being of bastard origin) could stand in presence of that ring, and retain the power of seeing it. God knows the truth. Relying upon his former intimacy with Shāh Muhammad, he desired to give his daughter in marriage to the nephew of Mir Abū Tālib, but he was by no means inclined to agree to this proposal, and folk began to entertain increased suspicion against him, and both small and great talked openly about him. Shāh Muḥammad summoned these two holy men into his own private dwelling for safe custody, and took great pains to entertain them. One night, not long afterwards, an armed band entered his¹ house by the upper story and martyred both father and son who were engaged in their night's devotions. They then left the house, and in the morning the governor of the city came and enquired of Shāh Muḥammad how this had occurred. He absolutely denied any knowledge of the circumstances, and stated that he had no idea who the murderers were; then he prepared a report of the affair under the Great Seal, and sent it together with a despatch to Islem Shāh at his camp. Islem Shāh thereupon sent to Dihli Maḥdūmu-l-Mulk Mullā 'Abdu-llāh of Sulṭānpūr,² who was Shāikh-l-Islām and Sadru-ṣ-ṣudūr, to investigate this matter, and also despatched circular letters summoning the Chief 'Ulamā of the time, for example Miṣyān Ḥatim Sanbali, Miṣyān Jamāl Khān Mufti, and others. This conflict lasted two months after this time, and after great argument and enquiry it was with tolerable certainty conjectured³ that the murderers were agents of Shāh Muḥammad.⁴ This result was reported to

394. Islem Shāh, but before any reply could be received Shāh Muḥammad, who had sunk from so high dignity to the depths of disgrace, could not endure the anxiety, underwent venesection and took sour milk in addition, and endured voluntarily humiliating penance. Report also says even more than this, but, every one knew perfectly well that all these austerities and self-inflictions, were the outcome of hypocrisy and deceit, and not inspired by religious motives.

This event took place in the year 956 H. Another important incident was the affair of Shaikh 'Alāi Mahdi of Baiāna,¹ which closely resembles the affair of Sidi Maula,² which took place during the reign of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn Firōz Shāh, in fact the proverb, One shoe is like its fellow,³ is exactly applicable here.

The following is a brief exposition of this affair: The father of the aforesaid Shaikh 'Alāi was called Ḥasan, and was one of the great Shaikhs of the country of Bangāla, and on his arrival from Bangāla on the occasion of his pilgrimage to the holy city of Makka with his younger brother Shaikh Naṣru-llah, who was one of the most eminent of the 'Ulamā, came from there to Hindūstān and took up his abode in the province of Baiāna. The words Jā'u naṣru-llāhi wal fatḥ,⁴ were found to give the date of that event. The elder brother gave his attention to *irshād*⁵ and hidāyat, and the younger⁶ to *fatwā*⁷ and instruction in religious knowledge.⁸

Shaikh 'Alāi, who was the most orthodox of the sons of the Shaikh, the tablet of whose forehead was from early boyhood distinguished by the marks of nobility and uprightness, and the evidences of a youth to be spent in the worship of God and in following the ordinances of the prophet of God, may the peace and blessing of God rest upon him, in the service of his venerable father devoted himself to the acquirement of exoteric and esoteric sciences; and to the improvement of his character, disposition, and behaviour, and in a short time⁹ having read all the routine works by the aid of his natural quickness of apprehension and clear intellect, engaged in tuition and instruction.

Verse.

Continual learning is requisite with application and exertion,
 Always by day argument and by night repetition.
 Piety, asceticism, worship and reverence,
 Without these, all acquisitions are wondrous vain.

After the death of his revered father, having abandoned the ordinary conversation and giving up all connection with the delusive phantoms of the world, he set himself to follow consistently the paths of obedience and austerity, firmly occupying the prayer carpet of the Shaikhs, and used to engage in the direction and instruction¹ of seekers of the right way. Nevertheless he still retained a residue of evidences of worldly desires, and in accordance with the saying, "The last thing to leave the head of the just is the love of glory,"² seeking as he did to claim superiority over his fellow-men, he was unwilling that any other Shaikh in that city should share his dignity; this he carried so far that on the day of the festivals, from his excessive jealousy³ and envy, he caused one of the leaders of the contemplative⁴ and ascetic⁵ Shaikhs of the Sūfi party to descend from his litter, thus inflicting a grievous blow to his dignity. He used to arrogate to himself alone the dignity of Shaikhdom. His other brothers, who in respect of years and experience were his superiors, used also to yield submission to him and pride themselves upon it.⁶

In the meanwhile Miyān 'Abdu-llah, a Niyāzi⁷ Afghān, who was at first one of the most noted lieutenants of Shaikh Salim Chishti of Fathpūr, and who eventually with his permission proceeded on a pilgrimage to the sacred city of Makka, and performed various kind offices and favours for him, taking part with Mir Saiyyid Muḥammad of Jaunpūr,⁸ may God sanctify his holy resting-place, who had claimed to be the promised Mahdī, and adopting the manners of a Mahdi, on his return from the Ḥijāz took up his abode in Biānah, and making his dwelling in the corner of a grove far from the haunts of men on the borders of a tank, used to cast water upon his head; and when the times of prayer came round, used to gather together certain of the labourers, hewers of wood and drawers of water who had to pass by that way, and compel them to form an assembly for prayer,¹ with such a degree of enthusiasm, that if he met any man disinclined for the meeting he would give him a few coins² and encourage him, thus not allowing the reward of the assembly³ to escape him. 396.

When Shaiikh 'Alāi saw his conduct he was greatly pleased,⁴ and said to his own followers, This is religion and true faith which Miyān 'Abdu-llah Niyāzi has, whereas the path in which we are held is nought but idolatry and infidelity.⁵

Just as in boldness the lioness surpasses the lion.

Then approaching Miyān 'Abdu-llah, with all respectful submission to him, he took instruction in the ceremonial observance of *Zikr*⁴ in the manner which obtains among that sect.

The interpretations of the Qur'ān, and the delicate points and minutiae and true meanings of that sacred book were easily revealed to him, and a large number of the friends and companions who were in accord with him, and believed in him, some of them unmarried and some with families, chose companionship with him even at the risk of their lives, and following the path of his guidance with the foot of reliance in God, three hundred householders, abandoning all other source of gain and traffic, agriculture and skilled labour, spent their time with him. service of Almighty God. Twice daily after the morning prayer and another prayer, great and small would gather in that assembly, and listen to an exposition of the Qur'ān. Shaiikh 'Alāi had such a marvellous power of attraction that when he was expounding the Qur'ān almost every one who heard him, of his own accord withheld his hand from all worldly occupation, and elected to join that assembly,¹ abandoning his family and relations and children, enduring the hardships of poverty, hunger and religious warfare never troubled himself again about his work or gains; and if he had not that degree of fortitude, his penitence and repentance of his sins and iniquities would certainly have availed nothing, while many a one thought it his duty to empty his cooking vessels at nightfall of all the necessities of life even to salt and flour and water, and let them remain upside down, and they kept nothing in the way of means of existence by them, from their extreme faith in the providence of Almighty God, and the saying "Each new day brings a new provision" was the basis of their practice. 398.

A short account of this sect is given in the *Najātu-r-rashīd*² which should be consulted.³

In spite of this they were in the habit of keeping arms and implements of war always with them⁴ as a protection against their enemies, so that anyone who was unacquainted with the truth of the matter would be apt to think they were wealthy; *The ignorant think them to be rich because of their modesty.*⁵ And whenever they saw any irreligious or forbidden action either in the city or the market, they went and called the offenders to account by main force,⁶ and admitted no investigation by the governor, and on most occasions they got the best of it; they aided every magistrate of the city who acted in conformity with their religious tenets and principles⁷ in carrying out his measures, while no one who was opposed to their views could [stand against them. Matters came to such a pass that fathers left their sons, brother left brother, and wife left husband]¹ and entered the charmed circle of the Mahdī, voluntarily submitting to poverty and extinction. Miyān 'Abdu-llah when he saw that Shaikh 'Alā'ī had lost his influence with rich and poor alike, and that his day was over, was much vexed, and speaking with gentleness and moderation, said by way of advice, The time cannot away with affairs of this kind, and truth nowadays has become more bitter than colocynth. It were wiser for you to quit this vale (of iniquity) and either retire into obscurity or determine upon a journey to the Hijāz.

Shaikh 'Alā'ī,² retaining that selfsame habit and conduct³ which he always had, accompanied by six or seven hundred families, set out for Gujrāt in the hope that in the companionship of the chiefs⁴ and leaders of this sect he might learn the customs of the inmates of cloisters.⁵ At the time of his arrival at the township of Basāwar from Baiāna, my late father took me, the writer of these pages, to do homage to him. In consequence of my tender years, his form remained fixed in my memory as a dream or a vision. On his arrival at Khawāspūr which is near Jodhpūr, Khawāss Khān who had been appointed to that district, at first came out to receive him and joined the circle of his adherents: but in consequence of his devotion to musical entertainments and pastimes,⁶ whereas now every Thursday night Sūfis used to assemble in his house, and Shaikh 'Alā'ī forbade music and other prohibited⁷ pastimes, and enjoined⁸ that which is a well known proverb. Shaiḥ 'Alā'i in consequence of certain opposition which arose, turned back in the middle of the journey and returned to Baiāna, and at the time when Islem Shāh had taken firm possession of the throne of power in Āgra, and the rumours regarding Shaiḥ 'Alā'i reached his ears, he sent for Mir Saiyyid Rafi'u-d-Dīn the traditionist, and Miyān² Abul-fath of Thanesar and other learned doctors of Āgra, and summoned Shaiḥ 'Alā'i from Baiāna, at the instigation of Makhdūmu-l-mulk Maulāna 'Abdu-llah of Sultānpūr. He accordingly, accompanied by a party of select³ companions, all of whom wore mail and were fully armed, came to the Court, and paying no heed to the customary observances of kingly assemblies,⁴ greeted the whole assemblage in the manner appointed by the laws of Islām.⁵ Islem Shāh acknowledged his salutation with indignation, as the appearance of the Shaiḥ greatly displeased⁶ him and his courtiers.

Makhdūmu-l-Mulk had fully persuaded Islem Shāh that Shaiḥ 'Alā'i was a revolutionary who laid claim to being the Mahdī, and that the Mahdī himself would be king of the whole world: consequently as he presumed to revolt he was deserving of death. 'Isā Khān⁷ Hajjāb who held a very confidential post, and the other Amirs, when they saw Shaiḥ 'Alā'i in this displeasing attire, with ragged clothes and worn out shoes, said to Islem Shāh: "This fellow, in this condition and with this miserable appearance, wishes to take away the kingdom from us, do he imagine that we Afghāns are all corpses!"

Prior to the convening of the assembly for discussion, Shaiḥ 'Alā'i in accordance with his invariable custom, had expounded a few verses of the Qur'ān, and delivered such a profitable discourse, in most elegant language, comprising a criticism of the world, and a description of the last judgment, and contemptuous remarks regarding the learned men of the time, and all their faults and failings,¹ that it had the most profound effect² upon Islem Shāh and the Amīrs who were present in the assembly, notwithstanding their hardness of heart, so that it brought tears to their eyes and left them amazed and confounded. Islem Shāh then rose from the assembly, and giving the matter his own attention sent refreshments from inside the palace for the Shaikh and his companions.³ The Shaikh, however, refused to touch⁴ the food himself, and moreover when Islem Shāh entered⁵ he did not pay him any respect, and merely said to his friends: Any one who chooses may eat of it. When they enquired of him the reason of his abstaining from eating the food he replied: "Your food is due to Muslims because you have possessed more than was yours by right, contrary to the dictates⁶ of the law of Islām." Islem Shāh notwithstanding this repressed his anger, and referred the enquiry into the truth of that dispute,⁷ and the decision of that contention to the 'ulamā.

The following day Bahmān and Mulla 'Abdu-llah spent every moment in urging Islem Shāh to put the Shaikh to death. At last Islem Shāh gave orders for his expulsion,⁵ and forbade him to remain in his kingdom, and ordered him to go to the Dakkan. junction Islem Shāh had left Agra for the Panjāb¹ with the intention of quelling the disaffection of the Niyāzī faction; when he arrived opposite to Baiāna at the halting-place of Bahrsūr, Maḥdūmu-l-Mulk said to Islem Shāh "we have earned a few days respite² from the lesser evil" by which he meant Shaiḥ 'Alā'i, "but the great evil, that is Shaiḥ 'Abdu-llah Niyāzī, who is the instructor of Shaiḥ 'Alā'i and the spiritual guide of the Niyāzī faction, and always remains in the hill country of Baiāna accompanied by three or four hundred men fully armed and equipped, and raises disturbances there, is still flourishing." The fire of the anger of Islem Shāh, who was thirsting for the blood of the Niyāzīs, was fanned into flame by this breath³ of suggestion, and he ordered Miṣān Bahwa Lūhānī⁴ the Governor of Baiāna, who was one of the special adherents⁵ of Shaiḥ 'Abdu-llah, to produce the Shaiḥ. Miṣān Bahwa went to the Shaiḥ and said: It seems to me to be the best course for you to hide yourself for a few days in accordance with the saying "one should avoid misfortune" and migrate from this city to some other place, then perchance the king will forget⁶ all about you and never make an attempt of this kind again,⁷ and you will have met the emergency,⁸ while I for my part shall have a good excuse.

The reins of affairs are not in the hands of one who looks to advisability,

Yield the reins into the hands of Fate, this is the advisable course.

Accordingly he set out by night from Baiāna, and had an interview with Islem Shāh in the morning as he was mounted ready to march, and greeted him with 'Peace be to you.' On the instant Miyān Bahwa seized him by the nape of the neck and bent his head down saying: ¹ "My friend the Shaikh this is the way they salute ² kings." The Shaikh looked savagely in his direction ³ and replied: "The salutation which is in accordance with the sunnat,⁴ and which is that which the friends of the Prophet, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him and his family, used to make,⁵ and which he, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him and his family, used to give them in response, is this very form of salutation, I know no other." Islem Shāh, with evident aversion asked: ⁶ Is this the master of Shaikh 'Alā'ī? Mulla 'Abdu-llah who was lying in wait for him said: The very man. By order of Islem Shāh he was at once seized and most unmercifully beaten with sticks, and kicked and cuffed; the Shaikh as long as he retained consciousness kept repeating this text of the sacred word "Lord forgive us our sins, and our extravagance in our affairs; and make firm our footing, and help us against the misbelieving folk!" ⁷ Islem Shāh enquired what he was saying Mulla ⁸ 'Abdu-llah said: He is calling you and the rest of us unbelievers; Islem Shāh becoming exceeding wroth waxed still fiercer in his efforts to punish and torture him,⁹ and kept his retinue standing ¹⁰ an hour longer while they cudgelled him, and when he thought that the breath had left¹¹ his body—

A spark of life however remained¹ in the Shaiḥ, so they wrapped him in a raw hide, and kept him warm for a night and a day before a fire, till he recovered. This occurrence took place in the year nine hundred and fifty-five. When he had regained his health he left Baiāna, and commenced travelling, and spent some time in Afghānistān (Rūh), and some time among the Afghāns of Pattan in the Panjāb,² on the confines of Bajwāra between Ambér and Amritsar,³ and was in the habit of saying:⁴ This was the fruit of consorting with argumentative people.

returned to Āgra, Mulla 'Abdu-llāh set about inciting him,¹ and giving him a song which reminded him of former intoxications, again induced him to summon Shaiikh 'Alā'i from Hindiya, and to order punishment to be executed upon him, and spared no pains to remind him in the vilest possible way, that Shaiikh 'Alā'i had been condemned to banishment, whereas now Bahār Khān had become his disciple and follower, and the whole army had shewn their leaning towards him. Seeing that his own relations had sought absolution from him and had adopted his faith, there was great probability of disturbance in the kingdom. Accordingly Islem Shāh summoned Shaiikh 'Alā'i thence, and used still more strenuous exertions than before² to bring matters to a satisfactory settlement, and knowing as he did the ambitious nature of Shaiikh 'Alā'i, and recognising that there was no other man among the learned men³ of Dehli and Āgra capable of settling this dispute, he therefore directed Shaiikh 'Alā'i to be sent to Bihār to Shaiikh Budh⁴ the learned physician, in whom Sher Khān had the very utmost confidence, and who is renowned for the authoritative commentary which he wrote upon the Irshād-i-Qāzī,⁵ and bade him act in accordance with his directions.⁶ When Shaiikh 'Alā'i went thither, he heard the sound of singing and musical instruments proceeding from the rooms occupied by Shaiikh Budh the physician, and saw in his assembly certain other things repugnant both to the natural feelings and⁷ to religious law⁸ also, the very mention of which is disgraceful, so felt constrained to enjoin⁹ what was lawful and to forbid what was prohibited. In any case legalising incontinence was probably a less sin than legalising infidelity.² Shaikh 'Alā'i said that this is an iniquitous conjecture,³ as is proved by the fact that, whensoever worldly loss according to their belief is the result of the interference⁴ with some prohibited pleasure, and the injunction to obedience is held by them to be the cause of personal death and injury to their property and position, they have not even the fundamental properties of Muslims, so that their conformity to Islām need not even be considered. Seeing that the argument concerns the validity of Nikāh,⁵ why should one regret⁶ the fact of their not being Muslims? for it is said, *That which is based upon iniquity is most iniquitous of all.*⁷ That class therefore stand condemned. Shaikh Budh the physician however,⁸ having regard to equity became their apologist and entered a plea for them, praising⁹ Shaikh 'Alā'i and treating him with the utmost courtesy and respect.

First of all he wrote a letter to Islem Shālī in the following terms, "Seeing that the Mahdawī question is not indissolubly bound up with the faith of Islām, and very great difference of opinion exists as¹⁰ to the veritable signs by which the Mahdī is to be distin-

The sons of the Shaiikh impressed upon him that Makhdūmu-l-Mulk ⁴ was the Sadr-u-ṣ-ṣudūr,⁵ and said, "This opposition of theirs to him has undoubtedly been the cause of your being summoned. At your great age it is far from wise for you to undertake so long a journey, and to undergo the severe fatigue incidental to it." They accordingly cancelled his first letter ⁶ and, whether he would or not, secretly wrote another letter ⁷ as if from Shaiikh Budh, couched in terms of flattery of Mulla 'Abdu-llāh, and sent it to Islem Shāh, saying, "Makhdūmu-l-Mulk is one of the most discriminating of the learned doctors of the day. What he says is the truth and his decision is the sound decision."

At the time when Islem Shāh was encamped in the Panjāb 408. Shaiikh 'Alā'i arrived at the camp of Bin Bāū; when Islem Shāh read the sealed letter of Shaiikh Budh the physician, he called Shaiikh 'Alā'i to come close to him and said to him in a low tone of voice, "Do you only ⁸ say to me in my own ear that you are penitent for having made this claim, you shall then be accorded complete liberty to go where you will ⁹ and do as you please." Shaiikh 'Alā'i however refused to give ear to his proposals and paid no heed to him; Islem Shāh in despair ¹⁰ said to Mulla 'Abdu-llāh, I leave him in your hands.¹¹ This he said, and gave orders for him to receive a certain number of stripes in his own presence.¹² Shaiikh 'Alā'i years. It was in fact an exact counterpart of the affair of Sultān Jalālu-d-Din Fīroz Shāh Khiljī after the execution of Sidi Maula,¹ save that the decay of the kingdom of Salim Shāh was even more rapid than that of Jalālu-d-Din. People considered Mulla 'Abdūllāh, who was always vexatious to the holy men, to be the cause of all this heart-burning, and this was really the case.

This event took place in the year 957 H. (1550 A.D.) the writer of these pages was at that time ten years of age, and invented the two following chronograms: The first is Zākīru-llāh, the second Saqāhum rabbuhum shārāban.²

Among the events which happened in the reign of Islem Shāh was the murder of Khawāṣṣ Khān, of which the following is a brief account. When Khawāṣṣ Khān, after the battle with the Niyāzis fled to the foot of the hills, Islem Shāh appointed to that district Tāj Khān Karrānī who was the brother of Suleimān Karrānī, and the most learned and able of the whole Afghān line, and wrote a command from his camp at Bin Bāū, that they were to induce Khawāṣṣ Khān, even if it were by means of treaty oaths, to come down from the hills, and put an end to him. However Tāj Khān was unable to effect³ anything owing to the impregnability of that mountain retreat, and accordingly sent Khawāṣṣ Khān the message of Islem Shāh promising him safety.⁴ He, relying upon the word of a Muslim, came⁵ and had an interview with Tāj Khān, who instantly⁶ had him put to death and sent his head⁷ to Salim Shāh at the township⁸ of Bin (Bāū), and after burying his body⁹ at the township of Sarastu, in the neighbourhood of Sambal, transferred it thence to Dihli. This event happened in the year 959 II. (A.D. 1551). As a chrono-

410. One of his magnanimous acts was the following. On his arrival at Kalpi in the company of Shir Shāh he gave two laks of rupees to the sweetmeat sellers of that city so that they might send sugarcane to Rautanbhor without intermission. In the same way also he gave money to all the mango gardens of Baiāna, so that they might send mangoes day after day² to the halting-places for the poor and necessitous.

In the meantime Shir Shāh died, and Salim Shāh appointed persons who recovered the sum of twenty-four thousand rupees³ which remained of that money, and on receiving it put it into the treasury.

In this same year Shaikh 'Abdu-l-haiyy, the son of Shaikh Jamālī Kanbāwī of Dihli,⁴ who was adorned with excellencies of science and poetry,⁵ and was a devout man,⁶ and the boon companion and specially favoured intimate of Islem Shāh, delivered up the life entrusted to his keeping, and Saiyyid Shāh Mir of Āgra invented the following chronogram :—
He said—

My name in itself would furnish the tārīkh

At such time as 'abd (the slave) was not in the midst of it.⁷

Among the events which happened during the time that Islem Shāh was encamped at Bin was the following. One day in the ¹ A footnote to the text says that these words give the date 989 and that therefore there is some mistake.

It appears that the real reading should be مصیبت بعام شد musibat ba 'ām shud, which would give the correct date, and this is in fact the reading in MS. (A). The text should accordingly be corrected in accordance with this, and we should translate, A general calamity.

interval between two times of prayer Islem Shāh was sitting at ease upon his roadster,¹ and was proceeding with a small escort from the camp to visit the fort of Mān Garh,² which lies at a distance of five or six krohs or thereabouts, in accordance with his usual custom, when suddenly a man sprung up in front of him and blocking the road, holding a sword concealed in his armpit like the proverbial Taabaṭa Sharran,³ under pretence of seeking redress (for some grievance) came forward and aimed⁴ a blow at him. Salīm Shāh, however, with great adroitness caught the blow upon the head of his whip. The handle of the whip was cut through and a slight wound was inflicted upon his face. When the man raised his arm to strike a second blow Salīm Shāh sprang forward and hurled himself upon that ruffian, and wrested the sword from his hand. At this instant Daulat Khān Ajyāra, the son of Saḡāwal Khān, who was the chosen intimate and bosom friend of Islem Shāh, galloped up and dealt a blow at that miscreant. Others also came up and enquired from him the reason for his action. Salīm Shāh did not approve of this⁵ and said: 'This wretch will destroy the houses of numberless people, lose no time in taking due vengeance on him.' However he recognised that sword as the one he had given to Iqbāl Khān. This Iqbāl Khān was one of the scum and off-scourings of Hindustān who had rendered Shīr Shāh several services. He was so exceedingly ill-favoured,⁶ mean-looking, and oafish in appearance that they used to call him Raḡmatu-llāhī, which in Hindustān is the term

According to the account in the Aghānī, he acquired his name from having slain a lion in a dark night in the midst of a violent storm of thunder and lightning; when morning came he brought the lion to his companions under his arm, and they said, Laqadd taabaṭa sharran; "Verily he has put destruction under his arm."

From that day forward, when he recognised that sword, he deprived him of his rank, so that⁴ he made him an example⁵ of the saying: Everything returns to its original state; but in spite of the incitation of the Amirs of the Afghāns that he should put him to death, he replied, "I am heartily ashamed to destroy the man of my own training."⁶

Islem Shāh, who had for this same reason become distrustful of Afghāns, now became afflicted with complications of his disease, and increased the opium in his wine,⁸ and the snake-bitten one drank a draught of poison,⁹ and thirsting for the blood of the Afghāns, became more than ever¹⁰ set upon eradicating them. After these events Islem Shāh returned¹ towards Gwālār, which he had made his metropolis, and had arrived at Dīhli² when tidings arrived that Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh had reached the banks of the Indus, with the aim of conquering Hindustān. Islem Shāh just at the³ very moment when this tidings arrived, 412. had applied a leech⁴ to his throat, but instantly took it off, dashed some water upon his head,⁵ and binding up his throat with linen rags⁶ ordered his army to proceed, and⁷ the first day covering three krohs, encamped, and the rank and file of his army who were at the last gasp from drunkenness, involuntarily followed him as though led by a halter round their necks. Certain of the Vazīrs who were well-disposed to him⁸ represented that inasmuch as a powerful foe had come against him, and his soldiery were worthless, it would be just as well if orders were given for their pay to be issued to them. Islem Shāh replied that if⁹ he were to give them money at that particular time they would attribute it to his being weak and in straits, so I will wait, said he, till my return after this victory,¹⁰ when I will give them, with one stroke of the pen, two years pay. The soldiers had patience and without a murmur awaited what fortune Providence would bring them, at the same time expecting some sudden calamity,¹¹ and in spite of their state of unpreparedness arrived at the encampment. When it was reported to Islem Shāh that the artillery was ready, but that, as the bullocks¹² for the gun-carriages had been left at Gwālār, they awaited his orders, he replied, 'What possible use are such a crowd of thousands of infantry and cavalry, are they to get their monthly pay for nothing?' accordingly he made them all do

One day he saw that Daulat Khān was absent and asked 'where can he be?' They replied he has probably gone to the house of one of his relatives. Then he knew that to all appearance he was playing a time-serving part with others. At that moment Daulat Khān arrived and Islem Shāh quoted this verse:—

Thou knowest my value, how faithful I am³
Stay! before thou seekest the companionship of other friends.

It is reported on excellent authority also that Islem Shāh had ordered⁴ the treasury-officer that he should give Daulat Khān every day for his personal expenses as much as a lak of tankas, as a matter of course and unasked,⁵ but that if asked for a larger sum he should produce it for his use. At last he left this world of regrets, wounded by countless sorrows, and abandoned his kingdom to the desire of his enemies. The duration of his reign was nine years. His body was taken to Sahsarām and buried by the side of his father. This event occurred in the year 961 H.,² and by a coincidence it happened that in the course of this (self-same) year³ Sulṭān Maḥmūd of Gujrāt, who had adorned the throne with justice⁴ and equity and the fear of God, drank the cup of martyrdom at the hands of his servant Burhān.⁵ Nizām-u-l-Mulk Bahri,⁶ the king of the Dakhan, also took his way to the ocean of non-existence, and Mir Saiyyid Na'matu-llāh, whose poetical name was Rusūlī,⁷ who was one of the incomparable learned men and a close companion of Islām Shāh, wrote this chronogram:—

Islem Shāh notwithstanding his not having read poetry had many apt quotations in his memory, and being a clever critic, used constantly to practise the art of versification with Amīr Saiyyid Na'mat Rusūli,⁴ and used to compose many elegant verses and to enjoy listening to those of his fellow poet. Moreover he was highly esteemed by the learned and religious men ⁵ of his time. They say that when he reached Alwar on his way to the Panjāb, he one day caught sight of Mulla 'Abdu-llāh of Sulṭānpūr ⁶ who was at some distance coming towards him ; addressing his attendants he said : " Have you any idea who this is who is approaching." One day when, having summoned the most renowned Amirs to the durbār hall of the fort of Gwālīār, 'Adli was engaged in distributing jāgīrs, he ordered that the Sarkār of Qanauj should be transferred from Shāh Muḥammad Fārmālī, and given in perpetuity to Sarmast Khān Sarbaui, [Shāh Muḥammad was ill],² whereupon his son Sikandar, who was a brave, handsome, and well-built youth spoke fiercely with regard to this jāgīr. Shāh Muḥammad however admonished ³ him in gentle terms and forbade him to speak thus, but he answered his father "Once Sher Shāh placed you in an iron cage and kept you a prisoner for some years, while Islem Shāh made you the captive of his kindness and by intercession and influence obtained your release. Now the Sūr faction are attempting to destroy us, and you do not understand their infamous design ; ⁴ thereupon he began to abuse Sarmast Khān with all the petulance of youth and the arrogant pride of race and said : "Now our affairs have come to such a pass ⁵ that this dog-seller ⁶ is to enjoy our jāgīr." Sarmast Khān, who was a tall, powerful man full of energy, placed his hand upon the shoulder of Sikandar intending to make him prisoner by underhand means, and said : "My boy, why are you saying all these bitter things," Sikandar however perceived his intention, clapped his hand to his dagger, and struck Sarmast Khān such a deadly blow over the shoulder blade, that he fell on the spot unconscious and died. A tumult arose among the people, and 'Adli fled and entered the women's quarters and put up the chain on the inside. Sikandar after that he had killed some and wounded⁵ others, at last made towards 'Adli and⁶ aimed a blow at him with a sword, which however struck a plank of the door: had he attacked him in the first instance he would have despatched him. The Amirs of 'Adli's party shewed themselves in their true colours that day, as most of them cast away their swords⁷ and took to flight, and were going about distractedly, till at last, after Sikandar had done as much mischief as salt in the yeast,⁸ they attacked him simultaneously from all sides. This contest went on for three or four hours, when⁹ Sikandar fell to a blow from the sword of Ibrāhīm Khān¹⁰ Sūr, sister's husband to 'Adli, and Shāh Muḥammad was struck down by the sword of Daulat Khān Lūḥānī,¹¹ both of them taking their way to the city of non-existence. Moreover he lavished upon Hāji Khān magnificent carpets, and vessels of gold and silver and all other requirements on the same scale: accordingly he entered the tent without hesitation and there took up his abode. This treatment occasioned great envy and jealousy⁴ among the Amirs of pure Afghān blood who became disheartened and spared not to express their discontent among themselves. Iskandar, who had a following of twelve thousand men, inasmuch as he estimated the army of Ibrāhīm as being more numerous than his own, shilly-shallied and made overtures for peace, and wrote a treaty in the following terms, that from Dillī to the eastern extremity of Hindustān as far as could be arranged,⁵ should belong to Ibrāhīm Khān,⁶ and that the country of the Panjāb and Multān as far as possible should belong to Sikandar, so that he might attain the object for which the Mughuls came to Hindustān. Ibrāhīm Khān after this ¹ defeat, leaving Kalpi made straight for ² Baiāna with all speed, and Himūn pursuing him arrived at Baiāna. Ibrāhīm Khān taking a body of the Nuhānī ³ and Afghan cultivators ⁴ and landholders of Baiāna, again ⁵ went out to meet Himūn, and, making a night attack upon him, the following morning fought a fierce battle with him near to the township of Khānwah, ten krohs distant from Baiāna, but could not prevail against his destiny, and Himūn said 'It is easy to smite a stricken foe' and rolled him up and inflicted a defeat upon him, so that ⁶ he was compelled to fortify himself in the fortress of Baiāna, which is a fort of exceeding loftiness and strength. Himūn thereupon, making that fortress the centre of his operations, attacked it continuously every day, subjecting the fort to a heavy bombardment; ⁷ Ghāzi Khān the father of Ibrāhīm Khān ⁸ kept the fort provided ⁹ with supplies by way of the mountain passes to the westward of Baiāna. Himūn kept up the siege of this fort for three months, and made inroads on the districts of Baiāna on all sides, pillaging and destroying.¹⁰ Nearly all the books which my late father ¹¹ possessed in Baṣāwar ¹² were destroyed. A severe famine prevailed throughout the eastern ¹³ portion of Hindūstān, especially in Āgra, Baiāna, and Dihli. It was so severe a famine that one ser of jawārī ¹⁴ grain had reached two half-tankahs, and was in fact not to be had (even at that price). Men of wealth and position had to close their houses, and died by tens or twenties or even more in one place, getting neither grave ¹⁵ nor shroud. The Hindūs also were in the same

Among the strange⁹ incidents of the year 962 H., during the time of the war between Sikandar and Ibrāhīm, was the fire which occurred in the fort of Āgra. The following is a short account of this incident. During the time when Āgra¹⁰ was emptied of the troops of 'Adli,¹¹ one of the Amirs¹² of Ghāzi Khān Sūr entered the fort of Āgra and took up his abode there,¹³ to make certain preparations and to take charge of the supplies; while he was engaged in inspecting¹⁴ the rooms of the warehouses, he happened to go early one morning into one of the rooms,¹⁵ and was going round¹⁶ carrying an open lamp,¹⁷ a spark from which fell in one of the rooms which was full of Thar Yāl⁶ marching with restless haste pursued Ibrāhīm for two stages, and joined Himūn; Hāji Khān was not pleased at Ibrāhīm's coming, nor would he send him any assistance. Ibrāhīm being disheartened⁷ turned aside, and bidding farewell to his father, brothers, and all his blood-relations, left them in Hindūn, and, with a small band of followers took the road to Bhatta. Eventually Ghāzī Khān a short time after, fell a prisoner into the hands of Haidar Khān Chaghta in Baiāna, relying upon assurances,⁸ and great and small of his party were put to death, and not a single one of that line was left, as will be related in its proper place,⁹ if God Most High so will it; and now that kingdom and empire, and the independence of that family have become as an idle tale. 'Adli and Muḥammad Khān Gauria were at that time sitting down over against one another, with the river Jamna between them, at a place called Ohhappar Khatta, fifteen krohs from Kalpi. 433.

Gauria, confidently relying upon his superior force to overcome the forces of 'Adli, had drawn up his cavalry and infantry and elephants to a number surpassing all computation, and was every moment² expecting victory, when suddenly the scale turned against him, and Himūn swept down upon him like a comet, and no sooner did he reach the ranks of the picked elephants after crossing the river Jamna,³ than he swooped down upon the army of Gauria, taking them unawares as does the army of Sleep, and making a night-assault gave no one time so much as to lift his hand.

They were in such utter confusion⁴ that no man knew his head from his heels, nor his turban from his shoes. The greater part of his Amīrs were slain, while the remnant who escaped chastisement took to flight. The wretched Gauria was so effectually concealed that up to the present not a trace of him has been found, and all that retinue and paraphernalia of royalty⁵ and grandeur became "like the scattered moths and like flocks of carded wool,"⁶ and became in a moment the portion of the enemy. NAsIRU-D-DIN MUHAMMAD HUMĀYŪN PĀDShĀH GHĀZĪ,

Returning from Kābul, a second time fought a fierce battle with Sikandar, and being favoured by fortune¹ with victory and conquest, restored to the imperial throne fresh lustre, glory and fortune. The following is an epitome of these events: After that the kingdom of Hindūstan slipped from the grasp of that Pādshāh glorious as Jamshid, like the ring from the hand of Suleimān,² and the opposition and strife between his brothers was not changed to amity and concord,³ and each one took his own way and sought his own asylum, considering his own interests by consultation with advisers, as has already been briefly related,⁴ Humāyūn crossed from the Panjāb and attempted to seize Bakkar,⁵ making his camp at the township of Lohri,⁶ which is near to Bakkar. Mirzā Hindāl having left Sind proceeded to the township of Pāntar,⁷ which is fifty krohs distant from Bakkar, on account of the abundance and cheapness of grain. Humāyūn sent a robe of honour and a horse with a message to Mirzā Shāh Husain Arghūn, governor of Tatta, saying, "I have arrived here driven by necessity and have fully determined upon the conquest of Gujrāt,⁸ and this undertaking is dependent upon your advice and guidance." Mirzā Shāh Husain spent five or six months⁹ in temporising, and brought Humāyūn by specious pretexts from the Bakkar territory to the neighbourhood of Tatta, with the intention of doing whatever might be advisable later on. 437..

In this year, 948 H.,¹ Humāyūn married Hamīda Bānū Begam, and coming to Pāntar returned to Lohrī. Mirzā Hindāl started for Qandahār in answer to the summons of Qarācha Beg,² the governor of that district, and Yādgar Nāṣir Mirzā, who had encamped at a distance of ten krohs from (Humāyūn's) camp also intended to proceed to Qandahār. Humāyūn thereupon sent Mir Abūl-Baqā,³ who was one of the most distinguished of the learned men of the time, Persian commentator on Mir Saiyyid Sharif, and author of other compositions, to advise him and dissuade him from his purpose, ⁴ At the time of crossing the river a party sallied out from the fortress of Bakkar and rained showers of arrows upon the people in the boats. The sainted Mir was struck by the soul-melting arrow of Fate, and was drowned ⁵ in the ocean of martyrdom. This event took place in the year 948 H. and the chronogram Surūr-i-kāināt ⁶ was invented to commemorate it.

Mirzā Yādgar Nāṣir hearkened to this advice and counsel and remained in Bakkar, and Humāyūn proceeded to Tatta, whereupon many of his soldiers left his camp and joined Mirzā (Yādgar) and spent their days ⁷ in comfort by reason of the increased pay they received. In this way Mirzā gathered strength, and Humāyūn crossing the river laid siege to the fortress of Siyāhwān.⁸ Mirzā Shāh Ḥusain kept sending ⁹ reinforcements opposing Humāyūn.¹ He further took possession of all ² the boats belonging to Humāyūn, who, in consequence of all these obstacles, any one of which was a sufficient reason,³ seeing the distress and misery of his army, abandoned the siege⁴ of the fortress, and all unwillingly saying, "Retreat is the wisest course," turned back towards Bakkar, and remaining several days inactive for want of boats, at last by the help of two zamīndārs recovered two boats which Mirzā had sunk, and reached⁵ Bakkar. Mirzā, as a means of covering⁶ the shame he felt, before he came to pay his respects,⁷ marched by forced marches against Mirzā Shāh Ḥusain, and putting to death or taking captive large number of the people of Tatta, who in ignorance of his intentions had left their boats,⁸ did a good deal to repair⁹ his former defections. Then with shame and confusion he came and had an interview (with Humāyūn) and brought in countless heads of the enemy. His faults were overlooked, but in consequence of certain events which occurred, he again became rebellious, and being deceived by the wiles of Mirzā Shāh Ḥusain, prepared for war. Mun'im Khān who eventually became Khān-i-Khānān also meditated¹⁰ flight. Both of them, however, became¹¹ aware of the folly of their design, and realising its heinousness abandoned their iniquitous intention. The men of Humāyūn's force were day by day going over to the side¹² of Mirzā Yādgār Nāṣir. In the meantime Maldeo, Rāja of the kingdom¹³ of Mārwar, who was distinguished above all the zamīndārs of Hindūstān on account of the strength of his following¹⁴ and his exceeding grandeur, again sent letters of summons. Humāyūn not thinking it advisable to remain¹⁵ any longer in the vicinity of Bakkar and Tatta, proceeded by way of Jaisalmir towards Mārwar. The Rāja of Jaisalmir blocked the road by which his army was to pass, and fought a battle in which he was defeated. In that waterless desert Humāyūn's army suffered terrible distress, so much so that¹ around the wells blood was spilled in place of water among his followers, and most of them² from the violence of their thirst cast themselves into the well as though they had been buckets, till it became choked.

In this state of affairs Humāyūn quoted the following naṭī'a, whoever is the author of it:—

From Jaisalmir proceeding by forced marches to Mārwar he sent Atka Khān to³ Māldeo, and halted for several days in the vicinity⁴ of Jodhpūr, awaiting his arrival. It so chanced that two of Māldeo's spies had arrived at that same place, and Humāyūn gave orders for them both to be put to death. In their despair one drew a knife, and the other a dagger,² and fell upon (their enemies) like boars wounded by arrows, and killed³ a large number of living things,⁴ men, women and horses, whatever came in their way.⁵ Among the number was Humāyūn's charger: Humāyūn thereupon asked Tardi Beg for a few horses and camels,⁶ he however behaved meanly, and Humāyūn mounted a camel. After a while⁷ Nadim, his foster-brother,⁸ gave the horse which his mother was riding to the king, he himself going on foot in his mother's retinue through that bare desert, which was like an oven for heat.⁹ His mother afterwards rode on the camel, and they traversed that road¹⁰ which was so terribly difficult, amid constant¹¹ alarms of the attack of Māldeo, [and with intense labour and distress.¹² In the middle of the night they reached a place of safety; by chance the Hindūs of Māldeo's army]¹³ pursuing them through the night, missed their

In the very first onset the leader of the Hindūs went to hell from an arrow-wound, and a large number were killed. They could not withstand the attack, and many camels fell into the hands of the Muslims. This victory was the occasion of great rejoicing.⁴ Marching from thence and being without water,⁵ after three days they arrived at a halting-place, where, on account of its depth⁶ a drum had to be beaten at the mouth of the well, so that its sound might reach the place where the oxen for drawing the water were.⁷ For lack of water, a crowd of people in their distress were lost, and⁸ disappeared like water in that sandy plain, which was a very river of quicksand, while many horses and camels

with all haste towards Bakkar. At the camp of Chaul¹ he sent for the Prince of auspicious mien, and was rejoiced by the well-omened sight of his son. His soldiers, in whose nature the craft of unfaithfulness was as firmly planted as is deceit in the nature of the times, were one by one, including even Mun'im Khān, deserting.² At this time Bairām Khān³ came from Gujrāt and tendered his allegiance. Considering it unadvisable to remain in that country Humāyūn determined to make for Qandahār. Mirzā Shāh Husain thinking this an opportunity not to be lost, in accordance with a requisition⁴ sent thirty boats and three hundred camels, and Humāyūn crossed the river Indus. At that time Mirzā Kāmran⁵ had taken Qandahār⁶ from Mirzā Hindāl and had left it in charge of Mirzā 'Askari, and having given Ghaznin to Mirzā Hindāl had read the Khutbah in his own name. After some time, however, he changed that also.⁷ Mirzā Hindāl having given up all royal dignity in Kābul used to live like a darvesh,⁸ and Mirzā Kāmran yielding to the instigation of Mirzā Shāh Husain wrote to Mirzā 'Askari saying, "Seize the road by which the Pādshāh will proceed and take him prisoner in any way you can contrive." Taking leave, and marching rapidly through Ardabil and Tabriz, (Humāyūn) again went to Mashhad the holy city,² and succeeded in visiting the shrine of the fountain-head of light.³

At the time when one night he was walking alone in that sacred enclosure, one of the pilgrims said in a low voice ⁴ to his fellow, "This is not Humāyūn Pādshāh."⁵ The other replied "Yes it is." Then coming close, he said in the ear of Humāyūn "So! you are again laying claim to omnipotence!" This was a reference to the circumstance that Humāyūn used generally in Bangāla to cast ⁶ a veil over his crown, and when he removed it ⁷ the people used to say, Light has shined forth! He also washed his sword in the river and said ⁸ "Upon whom shall I gird the sword?" When he arrived at Āgra, he imposed upon the populace a new self-invented form of salutation, and wished them to kiss the ground (before him). At last Mir Abūl Baqā with the Amirs and Vazirs paid the due respects, and the Amirs of the Qizilbāsh coming (by another road) ⁹ arrived at Garmsīr and took possession of the whole of that territory, and had encamped within view ¹⁰ of Qandahār, when ¹¹ after five days Humāyūn arrived, and Mirzā 'Askari was besieged, and for three months continuously ¹² fighting was kept up, and a large number were daily killed on both sides. Thereupon Bairām Khān was sent to Kābul as an ambassador to

It was also currently reported that Mirzā Kāmran was coming to the assistance of Mirzā 'Askarī, they accordingly lost heart and meditated a return to their own country.⁸ It so happened that just at that very time certain Amirs deserted from Mirzā Kāmran, namely, Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā, Ulugh Mirzā, and Mirzā Ḥusain Khān with other noted commanders, and offered their services to Humāyūn. Mu'ayad Beg, who was a prisoner in the fortress of Qandahār, escaped⁹ from the fort and had an interview with him, meeting with very kind treatment. With the exception of Bidāgh Khān and two or three other Amirs,³ no one remained in the service of Mirzā Murād, while the remaining Amirs of the auxiliaries, all returned to 'Irāq.

Humāyūn was induced by the coming on of the winter winds, to ask Bidāgh Khān to provide shelter for the followers of his army within the walls of the city, but that inhuman being invariably sent strangely rough answers.⁴ On this account some of the Chaghatai Amirs began⁵ to take to flight towards Kābul; among them was Mirzā 'Askari, who was seized in the way and brought to Humāyūn, who imprisoned him. Many stirring events⁶ happened in those days, which⁷ led to the delivery of Qandahār from the hands of the Qizilbāsh. First among these was this, that the Chaghatai Amirs urged upon Humāyūn the necessity of seizing Qandahār, on account of the coldness of the weather, saying ⁵ MS. (A) reads تبری تندي. The word here seems to mean one who is anathema, i. e., a Sunni.

The following long note is necessary as no book I can find explains the word تبرا Tabarrā. This word means enmity (as opposed to توला Tuwallā, affection) and is a technical term in use among the Shī'ahs. In defining tabarrā a distinction is to be made between مخالفت mukhālafat opposition, and عداوت 'adāwat enmity, the former not necessarily involving the latter, for instance two men may be in opposition (mukhālafat) on worldly matters, and yet be in thorough amity (maḥabbat) in matters of faith, or may be opposed to one another in questions of philosophy and yet be unanimous in religious questions. Thus enmity includes opposition, but opposition does not necessarily imply enmity. And yet it is held that محبت maḥabbat, affection, and عداوت 'adāwat enmity may occasionally co-exist: for the reason that عداوت 'adāwat is of two kinds, religious, as for instance the 'adāwat of Muslims and Infidels, who regard each other as enemies on the ground of the fundamental differences in their faith: and, worldly, as the 'adāwat between one Muslim and his fellow Muslim on account of some conflict of worldly interests. Thus it is conceivable that 'adāwat and maḥabbat may co-exist. Or again one Muslim may have an affection for another Muslim quā Muslim, but entertain a hatred for him as an adulterer, while he may love even a kāfir (Non-Muslim) for his good works such as alms, &c., while he hates him as an Infidel: his love being merely of a worldly nature in no way connected with religion.

The co-existence of 'adāwat and maḥabbat in one person due to one consideration is however impossible.

Again, the 'adāwat which true believers entertain against each other on account of worldly considerations is not injurious to the faith, however reprehensible it may be.

Moreover, the essential origin of 'adāwat in religious matters is kufir (infidelity), therefore one must consider every kāfir as an enemy: thus although there may be lawful ties of worldly affection (maḥabbat) between a Muslim and a Kāfir, such as the relation of father and son, or brotherhood other blood relationship or friendship, get all these considerations must be cast aside from the exigencies of religion, and 'adāwat must be based upon their kufr. Again religious affection is centred in īmān (faith of Islām), we must therefore from religious considerations love all the brethren of this faith whether they are obedient or contumacious.

Maḥabbat and 'adāwat between a true believer and an unbeliever (Kāfir) has different degrees, just as there are differences of degree in the love which any reasonable being entertains for his different relations. So also in religious love there are degrees The highest is that for the Prophet Muḥammad, next to this love for the assembly of believers who have close connection and intimate relation to the Prophet; and that assembly is confined to three parties: First, the children and relations of the Prophet who are his members; secondly, his pure spouses who are in a way his members; thirdly, his companions who elected to serve him and gave their lives for his cause.

If among the believers there be any devoid of faith (īmān), or guilty of any sin which destroys their former works, and in accordance with the dictates of the Qur'ān become worthy of 'adāwat (واجب العداوت) they are excepted (from the rights of maḥabbat) and enquiry should be made into their faith or absence of faith. Inasmuch as fīsq (immorality) does not necessarily exclude īmān (faith), it is not lawful to curse such an one, nor to display tabarrā against him, but rather to pray for his pardon; as long as he retains īmān it is lawful to entertain maḥabbat for him, and 'adāwat on religious grounds is unlawful, inasmuch as tabarrā and sab (reviling) are only justifiable when maḥabbat for a person no longer remains, which is restricted to death in infidelity.

Now we must consider the words of the Shī'ah divines who consider opposition to and contention regarding the Khilāfat of 'Alī as kufr, according to the words of Khwāja Naṣir Ṭūsī "Mukhalāfiyūhu fasaqah wa muḥāribūhu kaferah." "Those who oppose him are immoral and those who fight against him are infidels."

Accordingly a section who have contented themselves with opposition are not deserving of tabarrā, because their extreme fault is fīsq (immorality) and the fāsiq (immoral man) may be a true believer.

The above is translated from the Tuhfa-i-Īṣnā 'aṣḥariyah of Shāh 'Abdu-l-'Aziz of Dihli.

The gist of the matter appears to be this that Tabarrā is not justifiable for immorality, but only for infidelity. It seems therefore to take the place in Muslim Theology of the ἀνάθεμα of the Christian Code. It is more than excommunication, inasmuch as death in infidelity is made the test of tabarrā which thus implies final separation and curse.

The use of foul abusive language against the companions of the Prophet would be held to be loss of īmān (faith) and hence to render the reviler liable to tabarrā provided he died in that state. As the person referred to in the story was killed by Mirzā Yādgar Nāṣir he is called tabarrā accursed.

their notoriously brutal manner, in the presence of Yādgār Nāṣir Mirzā¹ [who had fled in concert with Hindāl Mirzā from Kāmran Mirzā] and come thither, uttered foul² and improper abuse against the companions of the Prophet,³ may the peace and blessing of God be upon him and his family, and may God be pleased with them; Mirzā Yādgār Nāṣir could not endure this, and struck him such a blow with an arrow which he had in his hand that the arrow penetrated his chest up to the wing, and passing through him struck the ground.⁴ Hāji Muḥammad Khān Kūki with two servants first of all entered the fortress of Qandahār together with a train of camels laden (with supplies), and put the guards to the sword; a second party following him, came up, Mirzā Ulugh Beg and Bairām Khān were of that number.⁵ The Qizilbāsh were astounded,⁶ and utterly confounded,⁷ and the proverb was exemplified,⁸ "Qāzi, I am an old woman,⁹ and if you don't believe me, I can scream just like one, listen!" Their haughtiness was humbled, and Humāyūn¹⁰ entering the fort¹¹ allowed Bidāgh Khān, who had come to him¹² in trepidation and anxiety, to proceed towards 'Irāq. Notwithstanding this, all the inhabitants of the city, who were heartily sick of them, killed the Qizilbāsh in every street. After he had settled Qandahār to his satisfaction,¹³ he made over charge of that district to Bairām Khān and determined to attempt the conquest of Kābul. Mirzā Kāmran also came out to meet him with the intention¹⁴ of fighting. Every day one or two¹⁵ of his noted Amirs deserted and joined the army of Humāyūn. In very truth the greater Humāyūn, upon condition of personal submission, effaced the record of his transgressions from the page of his mind with the water of forgiveness. Mirzā, in accordance with the saying "The traitor is a coward,"³ would not consent to an interview, and took refuge in the citadel of Kābul, where he entrenched himself, and fled thence in the dead of night to Ghaznīn. Mirzā Kāmran, after the defeat of his forces, remained entrenched in Kābul, and when he found himself in straits, out of sheer cruelty several times gave orders for the young Prince to be placed upon the ramparts of the fort within range of both artillery and musketry fire, but Māham Ānka ⁵ made her own body a shield for him against the arrows of calamity.

The Sardārs and Amirs, on account of the heat of the contest in which they were engaged, began to traffic in hypocrisy,¹ and kept coming backwards and forwards, now in one direction now in another. Many of them on both sides were killed. At last,² Mirzā,³ having made a hole in the wall of the fort, came out in disguise,⁴ and when Hāji Muḥammad Khān, who had been detailed with a party of men to pursue him, came up with Mirzā,⁵ Mirzā said to him "What if I have killed your father Bābā Qashaqa?" Hāji Muḥammad Khān, who was a veteran soldier, energetic and experienced, pretending not to understand him, returned, and the Prince reached his father Humāyūn safe and sound, and the part returned to the whole.⁶

Maulānā Qāsim Kāhī otherwise known as Miyān Kālī Kābulī. Our author (see vol. III. p. 172 of the text), stigmatises his poetry as crude and wanting in originality, although he acknowledges that it possesses a peculiar quality unshared by any other author. He was skilled in astronomy, as well as in rhetoric and Sufism, and had also some skill as a composer of music. Badā'oni laments the fact that notwithstanding all his advantages Kāhī spent his life in infidelity and impiety. The Atash-Kada (p. 190, Bombay Edition) says, that he sprang from the Gulistāna Saiyyids; one of his ancestors came out of the city to pay his respects to Timūr and joined his army, whose fortunes he followed until the birth of the Saiyyid aforesaid in Turkistān. He was brought up in Kābul whence he acquired his name. He went to Hindustān in the time of the Emperor Humāyūn, where he held a position of trust and honour. No date is there given for his death, which occurred in 988 H. See Āin-i-Akbarī (B) I, 566 n. 1; also Beale, O.B.D., p. 144.

⁴ MS. (B) reads دبسی Dabsī for وایسی Waisī (Text).

One night as Waisi was holden with sleep,
He visited him and called him towards himself,
And said, "If they ask thee concerning my death
Reply, "The pardoned Shāh remained in Makka."¹

Mirzā Kāmrān was as a king, brave and ambitious, liberal and good-natured, sound of religion and clear of faith. He used always to associate with the 'Ulamā and learned doctors. His poems are well-known. At one time he held such strong views of probity that he gave orders to exterminate grapes from his kingdom, but afterwards became such a slave to wine that he was not ashamed of the after effects of debauch; eventually he left the world penitent and devout. All's well that ends well.²

This event took place in the year³ 964 H.

Mirzā 'Askarī, after Qarrācha Khān was slain in the last battle before Kābul, fell a prisoner into the hands of Humāyūn's soldiery, and Khwāja Jalālu-d-Din⁴ Maḥmūd Diwān conveyed him to Badakhshān and made him over to Mirzā Suleimān. He was kept in confinement for some time,⁵ and then was released, and Mirzā Suleimān despatched him to Balkh, by which route he purposed journeying to the two sacred cities.⁶ When he reached a valley which lies between Shām⁷ and the sacred city of Makka, without accomplishing his object he hastened from⁸ that desert to the true Ka'bah which is the bourn of all mankind. The following is the tārīkh of that event:—

454. The end of Mirzā Hindāl was on this wise, that after Mirzā Kāmran had suffered defeat in the final engagement, and had taken refuge with the Afghāns, and Hāji Muḥammad Khān¹ Kūki was executed² on account of his numerous misdeeds, one night Mirzā Kāmran made a night attack upon the camp.³ By chance that night the dart of death struck Mirzā Hindāl in a vital spot, and he drank the draught of martyrdom. purging.' And his highness said: 'Give him honey to drink' and it was done. Then the man came to his highness and said: 'I gave him honey to drink, which has increased the purging,' then his majesty said to him thrice: 'Give him honey.' And the man came a fourth time and said: 'It increaseth the purging.' And his highness said: 'give him honey.' Then the man said: 'I have and it increaseth the purging.' Then his highness said: 'God has said truly, there is a cure for man in honey, and your brother's belly lied, by not accepting of the cure.' Then the man gave his brother honey to drink again and he got well."

Honey was held in high estimation as a drug among ancient physicians. The poisonous qualities of honey gathered from certain plants is well known; for instance, we find in the Makhzanu-l-Adwiyā that honey shed by bees which have lighted in the herb Absantin (Absinthium) and the like acquires a bitter taste, and causes diseases of the stomach and liver, while another kind of honey causes fainting and cold sweats and loss of consciousness. So also the poisonous honey of Heraclea, supposed to owe its poisonous properties to the aconite plant.

Quite recently well authenticated cases of honey poisoning have been reported in the United States. The honey in one instance was found to be impregnated with gelsemine. It is generally believed that two varieties of aconite, Kalmia latifolia some Rhododendrons Azalea pontica and certain other plants of the N. O. Ericaceæ, have poisonous properties which are communicated to the honey of bees lighting on them. It is said that the Azalea pontica was the plant which yielded the poisonous honey noticed by Xenophon in his account of the retreat of the Ten Thousand. The active poison andromedotoxin has been found in many Ericaceæ. The symptoms of honey poisoning are briefly described as vomiting, purging, acute gastric and abdominal pain and cramps, with surface coldness and pallor, and the general signs of collapse. See Ind. Med. Gaz., January, 1897, p. 27. See also Med. and Surg. Rep. September, 1896.

Verse.

When Fate made such a night attack¹ with the forces of the world

That the zenith became red like the twilight from bloodshed,

And abandoned the world to Shāh Humāyūn ;

The young plant-like stature of that shapely palm-tree

Was like a lamp to the sleeping-apartment of the sky.

Wisdom sought for a tārīkh of his death,² I said,

Alas ! a lamp has been extinguished by reason of a night attack.

Mirzā Amānī also wrote³ the following :—

Shāh Hindāl the cypress of the rose-garden of beauty,

When he left this garden for that of Paradise,⁴

The wailing ring-dove uttered this tārīkh,

"A cypress has gone from the garden of glory."⁵

And Maulānā Hasan 'Alī Kharās⁶ wrote :

The Afghāns could no longer protect Mirzā Kāmran, and it so happened that Mirzā went to Islem¹ Shāh; in the meanwhile the hidden purposes of Heaven were made manifest, so that after hearing the tidings of the death of Islem Shāh, and of the occurrence of extreme confusion and turmoil between the Afghāns of Hindustān and the tribal chiefs, Humāyūn definitely determined upon the attempt of the conquest of Hindustān.² In the meantime the lovers of contumacy, that is to say, the envious and riotous, so distorted the appearance of the sincere loyalty of Bairām Khān, in the clear mirror of the mind of Humāyūn, that it was inverted and he was represented by them as hostile. Accordingly an attack was ordered in the direction of Qandahār. Bairām Khān came out in person to receive³ Humāyūn and with all ceremony offered due service. Thereupon the disloyalty of his traducers became apparent. On this occasion Humāyūn was furnished, by the good offices of Bairām Khān, with the opportunity of meeting that Scion of the Walis, the offspring of the Saints, the seal of the Shaikhs of the Naqshbandi⁴ sect, Maulānā Zainu-d-Dīn Maḥmūd Kamāngar.

The following is a fuller account:—

The aforesaid Maulavi was from Bahdā,⁵ which is a village of the dependencies of Khurāsān,⁶ and had attained to the companionship of many of the Shaikhs, may God sanctify their spirits, especially Maulavi Maḥdūmī 'Arif-Jāmī, and Maulavi 'Abdu-l-Ghafūr Lārī, *may God He is exalted*⁷ sanctify their spirits, who supported themselves by giving instruction and making illustrations, and Bairām Khān having opened tutorial relations with him, used to go to take lessons from him, and now and then when he was reading Yusuf and Zulaikha and other books, they used to say,

"Oh, Bairām what is your wish! You yourself are as Yusuf and Zulaikha¹ in the world." And Humāyūn having ordered a banquet in honour of the sacred illuminated spirit of the asylum of the seal of prophecy, may the blessing and peace of God be upon him, invited the Ākhūnd,² and with his own hands took the ewer, while Bairām Khān took the basin, intending to pour the water over his hands; seeing this the Ākhūnd indicated Mir Ḥabibullāh, the grandson of Mir Saiyyid Jamālu-d-Dīn the traditionist, and said,³ "Do you not know who that person is?" Humāyūn thereupon perforce carried the ewer to the Mir, who, with the utmost confusion, poured half of the entire contents of the ewer over his hands, after which the Ākhūnd without scruple washed his hands, to their heart's content. At this time Humāyūn enquired,⁴ "How much water is enjoined by the Summat to be poured over the hands?" They replied, "so much as is necessary to clean the hands;" then first Bairām Khān poured water over the hands of the remainder of the assembly, and was followed in this service by Husain Khān the relation of the Mahdī, son of Qāsim Khān. At last the food was eaten, and Humāyūn found very great delight in their society, and was much benefited thereby. Afterwards he sent a piece of coined gold by the hand of Bairām Khān, saying, "This is a present."⁵ Inasmuch as it was his custom not to take a present from anyone, after great deliberation he accepted it, with excessive reluctance and disgust, and in return for it sent into the presence of the king several bows of his own fashioning, with something over and above (the value of the gold) saying, "Presents⁶ must be given on both sides."

The story goes that one day Bairām Khān caused a garment to be made of handsome Kashmir shāl,⁷ and brought it to him. 457. He took it in his hand and praised it⁸ saying, "What a valuable thing this is!" Bairām Khān said, "As it is a suitable garment for a darvesh, I have brought it as an offering for you." deserving of it than I. Many¹ miraculous acts are related of him. Some few of these Shaikh Mu'īnu-d-Dīn, the grandson of Maulānā Mu'īn Waiz, who by the order of the Khalifah of the time was for some time Qāzī of Lāhor, wrote in a separate treatise: among them this is written, that when archery practice was going on, he used in opposition to his usual habits to come every day² to the butts, and give instruction in archery. The youths used to urge and incite Bairām Khān to practise³ archery, saying that it would surely be useful to him some day. As a fact, the very first⁴ defeat of the Afghāns occurred in the fight at Māchiwāra,⁵ when the victory was entirely gained by the archers and in all probability that eagerness and instigation had this very end in view.

In that collection of stories also is the following, that when Bairām Khān, after making over Qandahār to Bahādur Khān the brother of 'Alī Qulī Khān Sistānī, came to Kābul, he appointed on his own part a tyrannical Turkomān, so that the people groaned under his oppressive hand, and made many complaints to the Ākhūnd, till he became ill as they desired, and they enjoyed a few days' respite from his oppression, and used to bring tidings of him every day to the assembly of the Ākhūnd. At last one day, as one of them was⁶ saying "He has risen from his bed," the Ākhūnd also, looking him in the face, said angrily, "Perhaps he may rise on the morrow of the resurrection." Three or four days afterwards he again fell ill, and removed the disgrace of his tyranny from the world. It is a saying of theirs that the Turk when sleeping is an angel, but when he sleeps the sleep of death he is superior to the archangels.⁷

Humāyūn, at the time of his return, had some intention of taking Qandahār from Bairām Khān and giving it to Mun'im Khān. Mun'im Khān, however, represented that now that the conquest of Hindustān was on the tapis a change of governors would be a source of dissension in the army, and it would be better to wait till after conquering Hindustān, and then to act as circumstances might demand. Accordingly Qandahār was confirmed¹ to Bairām Khān, and Zamindāwar to Bahādur Khān. Then coming to Kābul he prepared his army with transport and commissariat, and in Zū Hijjah 961 H. set out from Kābul to march against Hindustān.² And the following qita'h was written which gives the date in two ways.

When they arrived at Lāhor, the Afghāns of that place also not being able to withstand him dispersed, and the commanders of the vanguard⁵ started off towards [Lāhor and Thānesar]⁶ Jalandhar⁷ and Sirhind. That country was taken possession of without any trouble; Shāhbāz Khān and Naṣir Khān Afghān however fought a battle near Dipālpūr with Shāh⁸ Abū-l-Ma'ālī and 'Alī Qulī Shāibānī, who was eventually Khān-i-zamān,⁹ and was defeated. So great was the terror inspired by the Mughuls that thousands¹⁰ upon thousands of Afghāns would flee at the sight of ten of the huge-turbaned horsemen (even although they were Lāhorīs), and never looked behind them. Before Humāyūn's army crossed the river Indus, Sikandar Afghān Sūr gained the upper-hand of Ibrāhīm Sūr, and having conquered him¹¹ formed the intention of leaving Itāwa and marching to attack 'Adlī. the Indus, and the Afghāns, wherever they were, set about planning how to save their wives and children; however one did not help the other, each one occupied himself with his own necessities, and they knew well that it was only Islem Shāh who could successfully contend against the Mughuls, no other person had the power. Notwithstanding this however, Sikandar, in the neighbourhood of Jalandhar, first ¹ appointed ² Tātār Khān Kāsī with Ḥabīb Khān and Naṣīb Khān Taghūchī with thirty thousand cavalry, to oppose the troops under Humāyūn which had been collected in that district, and he himself came on in their rear.

The Chaghātāi Amirs ³ crossed the river ⁴ Sutlej, and the Afghāns followed them; at sundown the two lines met and a fierce battle ensued. ⁵ The Mughuls set their hands to their bows with such effect that every arrow which they freed from the bowstring bore the message of death to the ears of one or other of the enemy, and the Afghāns, whose weapons of offence ran short, ⁶ took refuge in ⁷ a ruined village; and with the object of gaining a better view of the Mughul troops ⁸ they set fire to the roofs. ⁹ The result, however, was the very reverse ¹⁰ of what they desired, and their stratagem had this result, that the Afghāns remained in the light, while the Mughuls were in the darkness and riddled the Afghāns with arrows. Thence he marched by forced marches straight for the environs of Dihli, and Sikandar Sūr with eighty thousand cavalry, and elephants of note, and a strong force of artillery, collected round him the Afghāns from every direction, and came to Sirhind, digging a trench round his camp ³ after the custom ⁴ of Shir Shāh. This he fortified, and took up his position; the Amirs of Humāyūn's army holding a council of war, fortified Sirhind, and as far as they could, shewed they were prepared to defend it, and sending despatches to Lāhor begged Humāyūn to come in person, and then awaited his arrival. Humāyūn with all speed ⁵ marched and came to Sirhind, ⁶ and every day fierce contests ⁷ took place between the more venturesome spirits on both sides. Sometime passed in this way, till the day when the command of the advance-guard of the army fell to the turn of the young Prince of the world; ⁸ seizing his opportunity he drew up his line of battle. On one ⁹ side was the Prince, the Asylum of the world; and on the other side Bairām Khān, Sikandar Khān, 'Abdu-llāh Khān Osbak, Shāh Abūl-ma'ālī, 'Alī Qūlī Khān and Bahādur Khān made manly onslaughts. Shāh Abū-l-Ma'ālī was detailed ² to pursue Sikandar, and in the month of Ramaẓān the blessed, in the year 962 H. the city of Dihli became the seat of the imperial glory and majesty, and most of the regions of Hindustān for the second time enjoyed the honour of the khutbah and sikkah of Humāyūn. No king before this time had ever been so fortunate as to attain to the glory of imperial power a second time, ³ after having suffered defeat; whereas in this case the power of God whose glory is supreme was plainly shewed. And in this year Humāyūn apportioned the greater part of his territories ⁴ among his faithful adherents, and vowed the pargana of Muṣṭafaābād, the revenue of which reached the sum of thirty or forty laks of tankas, as a votive ⁵ offering to the Spirit the author of victories, the guardian of prophecy on him and on his family be blessings without end. He also gave Hissār Firūza as a reward ⁶ to the Prince, just as Bābar Padshāh also had conferred it, in the commencement of his victories, as a reward, ⁷ upon Muḥammad Humāyūn, and the whole of the Panjāb he bestowed upon Shāh Abū-l-Ma'ālī, and nominated him to oppose Iskandar the Afghān, who, not being able to stand against him, shut himself up in the northern hills, and Shāh Abu-l-Ma'ālī having reached high rank ⁸ was living in great pomp in Lāhor; on this account the crow of conceit made its nest in his brain, and brought matters to this pass ⁹ that after the affair of (the king) whose dwelling is in Paradise, the queen shewed signs of contumacy and rebellious Shāh Abū-l-Ma'ālī was appointed to Hisār Firūza, but had not yet started when Qabā Khān Gang was appointed to Āgrā, 'Alī Qulī Khān to Mirāth and Sambal, and Qambar Diwāna to Badāon, and Haidar Muḥammad Khān Akhta Begī⁵ to Baiāna. Haidar Muḥammad Khān kept Ghāzi Khān Sūr,⁶ the father of Ibrāhīm Sūr, for sometime besieged in the fortress of Baiāna.⁷ And inasmuch as the good fortune of the Afghāns was, like their good sense, on the decline; although before the siege and after it also, thoughtful and experienced men urged him to march on Rantanbhor and thence to Gujrāt, he would not listen to them, and fell like a fish into the net.

(Diwāna)¹ who knew no moderation, was at that very time preparing to tyrannise over the people even more than before, taking by force the daughter of one and the property of another; and in consequence of his want of trust² in the people of the town, used himself to go the rounds by night³ from bastion to bastion, and see to the proper state of the defences. In spite of this his imagination used to run riot,⁴ and his ideas, in consequence of his infatuation, were excited to such a degree, that he used to go for half the night into an empty⁵ room and lay his ear upon the ground, and going on⁶ from there a few steps would spy about, and then return to his original post; suddenly he called the pioneers and said, "A noise has reached my⁷ ears, dig up⁸ the ground in this spot." astonished at this degree of vigilance,¹ and the people of the city by common consent despatched a message to 'Ali Quli Khān saying, "On such and such a night let the besiegers make an attack² up such and such a bastion, so that we may bring them into the fort by the help of nooses and scaling-ladders." Accordingly this they did, and having admitted the soldiery of 'Ali Quli Khān, Shaiikh Ḥabīb Badāoni, who was one of the most notable men³ of the place, took his place at their head, and leading them to the bastion of the Priuces,⁴ who were the relations of Shaiikh Salīm Chishtī of Fathpūr, set fire to it. On the morrow when the sun rose, the sombre-fated Qambar, wearing over his head a black blanket which was an emblem of his wretched fate,⁵ came out of the city. They seized him as one would a jackal and brought him in, and although 'Ali Quli Khān spoke gently to him,⁶ saying "Bow thy head,⁷ that I may spare thy life," that madman, fed on dog's brains gave him an abusive answer, so that he was sent to join the dogs of hell. His tomb is well-known in Badāon. He used to spread plentiful feasts and say (to his guests) "Eat! for wealth is the wealth of God, and life is the life of God, and Qambar Diwāna is the cook of God."

The forefingers were ordered to be put into the ears while repeating the Azān to strengthen the voice; probably this was due to the subjective sensation of increase of sound of the voice when the external meatus is closed. The Azān has special virtues attached to it, for those who uttered it. Whether in the house or in the mosque even by mistake he never placed his left foot down before the right, and if any one placed the left⁴ foot in his house he would say, "It is the left foot," and would make him turn back and bring him in again. From his excessive reserve he never opened his lips in a smile, nor did he ever cast an angry glance at any one. They say that Shāikh Ḥamid, the commentator of Saubal, on the occasion of the conquest of Hindustān, for the second time went to Kābul to receive him, and in spite of the extreme confidence which Humāyūn had in him, one day he fell into a passion and said "My king, I see the whole of your army are Rāfizi⁵ (heretics)." And in order to recount the many virtues of that monarch who has obtained pardon and remission, may his resting-place be happy, a separate record would be necessary. Countless³ poets, the wonder of the age, sprung from under the skirt of his auspicious reign.⁴ Among these, in Badakhshān was Maulānā Junūnī⁵ 469. Badakhshī the enigmatist, who composed a qaṣīdah made up of thirty-eight couplets in honour of that⁶ monarch, whose refuge is the pardon of God, during the time that he was a Mirzā; and certain tours de force which had escaped the net of the qaṣīdah which Mir Saiyyid Zū-l-fiqār Shīrwānī composed in honour of Khwāja Rashīd Vazīr, and the qaṣīdah of Salmān Sāwajī which he wrote in honour of Khwāja Ghīās Vazīr, this poet⁷ seized, for example the mu'ammā,⁸ and Izhār-i-muṣmar,⁹ and the tārīkh.¹⁰ and other (tricks) of this kind, and in very truth that work of art is a veritable kāruāma (record of deeds), a miracle in the world of speech. The following are the opening couplet and another, taken from it:

¹ 'Umar Shaikh Mirzā, second son of Tīmūr, was the father of Bābar. See Am-i-Akbarī (B) I. 299.

Verse.¹

Shahanshāhā rukḥ-i-tū lāla o nasrīn lab-i-tū jān
 Hamī binām lab-i-tū ghunḥa-i-rangīn shuda khandān
 Namī gūyam khatt-i-tū sabzu o raiḥān khad-i-tū gul
 Shavad zāhir qadd-i-tū fitna-i-dawrān dam-i-jaulān.

And by taking all the verses of this qaṣīda after the manner of an acrostic,² the following opening couplet is formed:—³

Shahanshāh-i-dīn pādīshāh-i-zamān
 Zī bakht-i-Humāyūn shuda kāmrān.

While again, if the *hashw*⁴ of the two first couplets are written in red ink, the following opening couplet results, which may be read in three different metres.⁵

The following is the translation of these lines which are given in the original in the text, as the whole sense of the passage following turns upon the form and not upon the meaning of the couplets.

King of kings, thy cheek is the tulip and jasmine, thy lip is the life.
 As I look, thy lip like the bud in its redness, expands in a smile
 I say not, thy bloom is the verdure and perfume, thy cheek is the rose Life itself, from thy figure entrancing, appears in thy gait.

² توشیح Taushīḥ. The initial letters of each verse when taken together from the couplet given. Thus in the four lines given the initial letters are ش sh ه h ن n ش sh forming Shahansh. See Garcin de Tassy, op. cit., p. 164.

³ The couplet when translated, reads:

Emperor of the faith, Pādīshāh of the age,
 From thy good fortune thou hast become prosperous.

The play on the words Humāyūn and Kāmrān will be observed.

⁴ The first foot of the first mīṣrā' (hemistich) is called qadr, while the last foot of the same hemistich is called 'urūz'; similarly the first foot of the second hemistich is called ibtidā, while the last foot of this hemistich is called zarb. All the feet intervening between the qadr and the 'urūz', or between the ibtidā and zarb, are called hashw which means literally the stuffing of a pillow (Āgīn-i-bāliḥ). In the above the hashw of the verses is printed in red ink.

The scansion is as follows:—

Shahanshāhā	rukḥ-i-tū lā	la-o-nasrīn	labitū jān
Mafā'i lun	Mafā'i lun	Mafā'i lun	Mafā'i lun

The metre is thus Hazaj-i-Muṣamman.

⁵ The three metres in which these lines may be read are—

(i) Hazaj-i-muṣamman. See note 4 above.

Rukh-i-tū lāla o nasrīn khatt-i-tū sabza o raiḥān
Lab-i-tū ghuncha-i-rangīn qadd-i-tū fitna-i-daurān.¹

And if they be read in reversed order a couplet is formed which may also be referred to three several metres,² and with a change of *qāfiyah*³ and *radīf*⁴ in the following manner.⁵—

470.

Khatt-i-tū sabza o raiḥān, rukh-i-tū lāla o nasrīn
Qadd-i-tū fitna-i-daurān,⁶ lab-i-tū ghuncha-i-rangīn.

And from that which remains in black letters, a distinct opening couplet remained.⁷ Other tours de force also existed in this opening couplet, which are explained in the marginal notes to the work.

(ii) Ramal-i-muṣamman makḥbūn, and the scansion is :

زلا ورسبان	خط تو سب	له و نسرین	رخ نولا
فعلا تن	فعلا تن	فعلا تن	فعلا تن

(iii) Mujaṣṣ-i-muṣamman makḥbūn : and the scansion is :

زلا ورسبان	خطی تسب	له و نسرین	رخي نلا
فعلا تن	مفاعلن	فعلا تن	مفاعلن

See Elements of Arabic and Persian Prosody (Ranking) pp. 49, 67, 90.

¹ MS. (B) reads سنان in place of دوران so also footnote variant.

² The three metres are those given in note 5, on the preceding page.

⁴ ردیف Radīf is the name given to a quiescent alif following a fatha, a wāw quiescent following a zamma or a ye quiescent following a kasra, in other words it is one of the letters و, ی, placed as a letter of prolongation before the rawī. It is more accurately called ردیف Ridf.

Thus in the lines now cited the Radīf is the letter ye in the words rangīn, and nas'rīn, whereas in the former verses the radīf was alif, as in the words raiḥān and daurān. MS. (A) omits وردیف. See also Garcin de Tassy, op. cit., p. 370.

⁵ MS. (B) omits باین طریق.

⁶ MSS. (A) (B) read بوسنان būstān.

⁷ For example, we can read

Shahangshāh lab-i-tū jān
Hamī binam ghuda khandān,
Namī gūyam khad-i-tū gul
Shavad ḡhīr dam-i-jaulān

King of kings thy lip is life
As I look it wreathes in smiles;
I say not thy cheek's a rose
Blooming as thou passest by.

And from the four¹ couplets of a *qaṣīdah*² some of the words of which are written in red ink, the following *qiṭaʿ*³ containing the conquest of Badakhshān may be obtained, and the qiṭaʿ also has a hidden meaning, the explanation of which is obtained from certain verses extracted from these two qaṣīdahs.⁴

Qīṭaʿh.

Tū-i Shāh-i-Shāhān-i-daurān ki shud
Hamisha turā kār fath o zafar.
Girifti Badakhshān o tārikh shud.
Muḥammad Humāyūn Shāh-i-bahr o bur.⁵

*Rubāʿi.*⁶

Until the weak body of the beggar became the dust of his threshold,
His heart on account of his sorrow and vexation, fell desolate.
The life of this helpless one left him because of desire for the beloved,
His love exceeded all bounds, if haply at that time that king might summon him.

³ The قطعه qiṭaʿh. Must contain not less than two couplets nor more than a hundred and seventy. The first two hemistiches need not rhyme, but the second hemistich of every verse must rhyme with the final hemistich of the opening verse.

The قصیدہ qaṣīdah. In this form of poem the two opening hemistiches must rhyme. It must consist in Persian of not less than twenty-five couplets and not more than a hundred and seventy. See also Garcin de Tassy, Rhetorique et Prosodie for an explanation of these and other terms, and Gladwin, Dissertations.

⁴ The reading in the text and in both MSS. (A) (B) is unintelligible, we must evidently read این دو for آینه. The footnote to the text merely states that the reading in the text is found in all three MSS, but makes no attempt to explain the true reading.

⁵ محمد همایون شه بحرو بر. These words give the date 927.

The translation of these verses is:

Thou art king of the kings of the age,
Whose continual object is conquest and victory.
Then did'st seize Badakhshān, and its tārikh was Muḥammad Humāyūn king of sea and land.

*Gūshwāra.*¹

Tell the good tidings of the victory of the king of my faith. And if my life should obtain a few days grace from that exacting creditor² Death, this qaṣīdah, together with all the qaṣīdahs and such useful information as I have written down in a separate note-book in the course of my travels, shall, should opportunity offer, be included among the contents of the second volume of the *Najātu-r-Rashīd*³ which I am anxiously longing to complete, 471. should God, who facilitates our undertakings, so will it.

Another poet⁴ is Wafā'i, by which takhalluṣ Shaiḫ Zainu-d-Dīn Khāfi⁵ is commonly known, who was Ṣadr-i-mustaḡill (Judge-prenipotentary)⁶ during the reign of Bābar Pādīshāh. There گوشواره Gūshwāra. Lit., earring. The first line of a ghazal or qaṣīda, following immediately upon another.

کوچد فتح و سه دین نامه MS. (A). گو خبر فتح شه دین ما Read footnote variant reads.

² The following is the correct reading. Immediately after the gūshwāra و اگر عمر روزی چند از غریم متقانی اجل مهلت یافت این قصیده مع سایر قصاید و فوائد که در صحت ایام سیاحی در ریاضی علیحدہ نوشته شده

آن فوائد فراید را الخ - MS. (A).

³ Najātu-i-Rashīd. Najātu-i-Rashīd. There is a MS. of this work of Badāonī, belonging to the College of Fort William, in the Library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, No. $\frac{E}{204}$. (See J. A. S. B. xxxviii. p. 136). The title of the work gives the tārīkh of its composition on the second and last pages. The "second daftār" here mentioned by our author does not appear ever to have been written, though from his statement it would seem he had commenced the work.

⁴ MS. (A) reads دیگر وفائی که.

⁵ One Zainu-d-Dīn Khāfi, was a famous saint. His life is given in the Najāfāt-u-l-Uns, Calcutta edition, p. 569; but the one meant in this passage is the Shaiḫ Zain who read the Khawāḥ in Dihli in Babar's name after the battle of Pānīpat, see Firishṭa, Bo. Text, p. 361 and Erskine, Memoirs of Baber, p. 308.

Khāfi or Khawāfi means 'coming from Khawāf' which is a district and town in Khurāsān. Our maps have Khāff or Khāf due west of Herāt. See Āin-i-Akbarī (B) l. p. 445 and footnote, also p. 592 and footnote.

is a mosque in Agra to his memory,¹ and a school situated on the other side of the river Jamna. He was the possessor of excellencies both bodily and mental, and in the construction of enigmas and chronograms, and in extempore versification, and in all the minutiae of poetry and prose, and in rhetoric, he was unapproachable in his own age.

They say that in the very first assembly in which he made homage to Bābar Pādshāh, he asked, what is your age? Without premeditation he answered, *Qabl azin ba panj sāl chil sāla būdam, wa ḥālān chihal sāla am, wa ba'd az dū sāl-i-dīgar chihal tamām mī shavad.*²

It should moreover be known that (Bābar Pādshāh) also asked (a riddle) of the author of this Muntakhab saying: *Pish azin ba yak sāl panjah sāla būdam, wa ḥālān panjāh sāla am, wa ba'd azin ba dah sāl panjāh sāla mī shavam.*³

It is well known that one day Shaiḫ Zain went to visit the brilliant resting-place of Sultānu-l-Mashāikh Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliya may God sanctify him, and having heard that story of the Shaiḫ about "Al Hidāyā mushtarak wa tanhā khushṭarak"⁴ repeated this qit'ah on the spot:

His duties were to enquire into the circumstances of persons before grants were made to them. Under his orders were the Qāzī and the Mīr 'Adl. See Ain-i-Akbarī, (B) I. 268-270.

² That is to say "Five years ago I was chil (چل) years of age and now I am chihal (چهل) years of age, and two years hence my chihal (forty) years will be complete.

چل (chil) stands for 33 thus چ = 3 ل = 30"

چهل (chihal) stands for 38 thus چ = 3 ه = 5 ل = 30 while چل chihal is the Persian for forty.

MS. (B) completely loses the point by reading چل chil throughout."

³ That is, A year ago I was fifty (panjah) years of age, now I am fifty-one (panjah with the addition of Alif) years of age, ten years hence I shall be (پنجاه) panjah years of age.

پنجاه (Panjah) stands for 60: thus

پ = 2 ن = 50 ج = 3 ه = 5

Apparently we should read پنجاه (Panjāh) which would give 61.

⁴ This refers to a visit paid by Amir Khusrū of Dihli to Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliya, when he saw another visitor who had brought a present for Nizāmu-d-

Qit'ah.

Oh our Shaikh ! may there come to thee from God gifts without ceasing,

What am I that I should say "Al Hidāyā mushṭarak"

Thou sayest "Tanhā khushṭarak" as thou didst say before

Make it "Mushṭarak" if thou dost not say

"Tanhā khushṭarak."

Verse.

Grief has seized me by the sleeve, why should I hide my head in my sleeve ?

Desire has grasped my skirt, why should I withdraw my foot within my skirt ? 472.

Ah ! my sleeve in desire for thee and my skirt also are torn to rags,

Why should I hide my head in my sleeve and withdraw my foot within my skirt without thee ?¹

He wrote a tārikh dealing with the circumstances² of the conquest of Hindūstān, and explaining its wonders, in which he did full justice to the claims of erudition.

His death occurred near Chinhār in the year 940 H. and he was buried within the precincts of a college which he himself had founded.

Another (poet) was Maulānā Nādirī-i-Samarqandī, who was one of the wonders of the age, of excellent qualities, and a compendium of perfection.³ He had a strong attachment for a beautiful youth named Nizām, and the following well-known solution of an enigmatical meaning, was composed for him :

Verse.

I the broken-hearted tell the praises of Nizām the famous,

Dīn Auliā. Amīr Khusrū exclaimed "Al hidāyā mushṭarak." "The gifts are in common ;" whereupon Nizām-u-d-Dīn Auliā replied.

"Al hidāyā mushṭarak lākin tanhā khushṭarak."

"The gifts are truly in common, but I should be better pleased to enjoy them alone."

² MS. (A) omits احوال.

³ MS. (A) reads وفانل جامع بود. See Ain-i-Akbari, (B) I. 605 n.

For my heart, when absent from him, lies disordered¹ and enfeebled.

Rubā'ī.

I am grieved, and in my heart on thy account I hold a hundred sorrows,
Without the rubies of thy lips, I am matched against pain hour by hour;
I am in despair for this life, I the poor, the dejected,
I hope that the road of annihilation may become my refuge.

Gūshwāra.

I sing the praise of the locks of my beloved.
And the following verses are part of the fruit of his fertile genius.

*Ghazal.*²

How wondrous graceful is my loved one's form,
I yield myself a slave to that figure and carriage;
My loved one would not look towards me with compassion,
Perhaps she displayed an inclination towards strangers.
Nādiri! go towards the wineshop
And pledge thy head and turban for wine.

Verse.

473. Though I remained my whole life-long there at the head of thy street,
I swear by my life, that I never enjoyed a moment's peace;
Wherever I bowed my head with the intention of obeisance
Thou wert there the Ka'bah³ towards which I turned.
A whole world was admitted to intimacy, and yet I remained forlorn, ¹ نظامی Nizāme, lit. a governor, one who orders and directs. The play upon the word cannot be preserved.

² غزل Ghazal. The ghazal or ode must consist of at least five couplets but must not exceed fifteen. Its first two hemistiches must rhyme.

³ سجدة Sajdah, commonly pronounced Siddah, means a prostration in which the forehead touches the ground: as a religious observance the prostration, is on seven members; on the forehead, the two hands, the two knees, and the toes of both the feet; women must touch the ground with the elbows, men on the contrary must keep the elbows up. The palms of the hands

All were accepted there but I was rejected ;
 Why do you ask Nādiri, what is thy condition in that road,
 At one time I am unhappy, at another I was happy¹ there.
 He also wrote this Qaṣīdah in honour of the deceased Emperor.

Qaṣīdah.

Thanks be to God that with a settled mind
 Intimate² friends sat together in pleasure ;
 The rose-garden is the pleasure-resort of people, for there in the presence of the rose, the nightingale sorrowful at the absence of his beloved became rejoiced by its presence.
 It may be that the beloved one of the garden had been stripped naked by Autumn,
 So that she has woven a patchwork garment of the hundred petals of the rose.

Beneath his victorious standard, on the field of Fortune,
May the favour of the Everlasting be his protector and ally.
Oh thou by the generosity of whose hand all things have dental and essential² obtain permanence.

How can any one deny the vastness of thy knowledge ?

None but a stubborn disputant⁵ will deny self-evident truths.

¹ قوام qiwām is the stay or support of any thing, that in virtue of which it subsists.

² اعراض و جواهر A'rāz o jawāhir. By عرض 'Arazun, is meant in the conventional language of Muslim theologians, a thing that is not permanent, "an accident," as opposed to جوهر jauharun, "an essential," see Lane, s. v. عرض also kushshāf, s. v. v. عرض and جوهر.

³ MS. (A) reads preferably آیات طواهر for آیات ظواهر.

⁴ These two lines commencing هرگز حکمت occur in MS. (A) before the line commencing در روز ازل as well as in this place.

⁵ مبني. Founded on certainty, equivalent to مسلم.

This enigma upon the name of Kibār² is also by him :

Verse.

That face³ is the Qur'ān, and that down on the cheek is the sign⁴ of tyranny and oppression ;

The cheek of that heart-ravishing one has no endowment of the mole of fidelity.⁵

³ The text reads آنرو with a footnote saying that all three MSS. are the same. MS. (B) reads ابرو.

⁴ The text reads آيت, MS. (B) reads آينه.

⁵ The verse in the original runs thus :

Muḥṣaf ast ānrū wa ān khāṭṭ āyat i jāur o jāfā st

'Ariz i ān dīl-sitān bī bahra az khāl i wafā st

The word مصحف muḥṣaf here has two meanings, (1) a collection of pages مصحف ṣuḥuf, written upon, and placed between two boards, hence a copy of the Qur'ān, (2) affected by taḥṣif, which is a technical expression for so altering a word by changing diacritical points and altering the order of its component letters, that it acquires a different signification.

In accordance with this second meaning, in the word آنرو the letter و wāo is first dropped leaving آنر ānr then ر r is changed into ب b giving آبر ābr, by transposing these letters we get بار bār.

The word خط khāṭṭ has also two meanings, (1) down on the cheek, (2) a letter or character. Hence we may translate "that letter is the sign of tyranny and oppression." Now کاتن kāṭan, cutting or cleaving, is such a sign, and may be represented by its root, کاف kāf, which is the letter of the alphabet required, and when prefixed to the syllable بار bār above found gives the word کبار kibār, thus completing the mu'ammā or enigma.

The death of the aforesaid Maulānā took place in the year 966 H. and Mir Amānī Kābuli wrote the following ḥikā of the event.

Verse.

Alas ! the pity of it, that the discerner of subtilties Nādirī has departed,
That rare poet ² who did full justice to eloquence in the world ;
I sought to express the date of his death by way of enigma, Wisdom answered *one has gone from among the masters of speech.*³

Another is Shaikh Abul Wāhid ⁴ Fārighī, who was deeply imbued with the feelings of a darvesh and was ⁵ renowned for his sweet singing ; the following is taken from his poems :

Vers.

So great is the habitual oppression of that seeker after tyranny
That a morsel of mercy from him, seems a great beauty.
And in his impassioned style he says :

Verse.

Praise be to God that I am freed from the love of an ill-conditioned sot,
Who used to fall, as did his eyes, from drunkenness in every road,
Who, like the cup, for the sake of a draught, was lip to lip with every man,
Who like the flagon bent himself to every cup in every place.

⁴ Footnote to text says that the Nafā'is-ul-Maṭā'ir reads Abul Wājid MS. (B) reads ابوالرجد Abul Wajid.

⁵ MSS (A) (B) omit بود after مشرب and insert it after مشهور.

The following is also by him.

Verse.

At that time when my heart was blest with thy companionship,

It did not seem that such a blessing could be expressed ;

In short, the whole of my life's reckoning had passed in separation from thee,

Who can count the joy of meeting ! what a store of happiness it was !

Strangers last night were near you, while Fāriḡhī at an immense distance was burning like rue¹ upon the fire of disappointment.

This is also his :

Verse.

Oh my intimate companions do not break the bond of union

In dispersion is distraction, do not break it and depart.

And again he writes :

Verse.

When thou drawest out thine arrow from my breast leave its point there,

Grant me my heart to yield my life in thy service manfully.

His death occurred in the year 940 H., and he was buried in the monastery² of Shaikh Zainu-d-Din³ at Agra, and in consequence of the extremity of their unanimity and concord both left the world in the same year. It is said that at the time when these two eminent men went to Hindūstān, owing to their excessive profligacy they possessed nothing but an old *postin*⁴ between them. Shaikh Zainu-d-Din⁵ said to Shaikh Abūl-Wajid,⁶ "I will take this to the bāzār of Kābul upon the condition that you won't come and indulge in any pleasantries." He agreed, and a purchaser having run it up to a most extravagant figure was ready to give five *shahrūkhis*¹ but Shaikh Zain kept demanding more. At last Shaikh Abūl-Wajd came up in a disinterested way and was acting as broker, after a deal of haggling he said, 477. Ah! you cheat! why this door mat² itself contains³ five shahrūkhis worth of fleas and lice"! so the bargain was at an end, and Shaikh Zain was annoyed and said, "What sort of time was this for the stupid jokes you are so fond of? We wanted the price of a loaf, and this is the way you're going to pay for⁴ it"! Shaikh Abūl-Wajd fell into a fit of laughter.

Another is Jāhī Yatmān,⁵ who was from Bukhārā, and having acquired a reputation on this account in Kābul, offered his services at the time when the late Emperor proceeded towards Hindustān⁶ obtained great favours from Humāyūn, and rose to a confidential position, and at the time when Shāh Muḥammad Khān Sālū⁷ was left in Kābul as revenue commissioner,⁸ he treated⁹ the Mulla just like the rest of the people, and caused him serious annoyance. The Mulla accordingly composed an elegant tarkīb

¹ The shahrūkhi was a coin equivalent to 16 dams, or 2½ to a rupee. They were so called because they were first coined by Shāh Rukh the Mughal Sulṭān of Persia, A. H. 807-850. Thomas, Pathan kings, p. 381. The purchaser was thus willing to give about two rupees for the postin. The postin is a jacket made of dressed sheepskin dyed a yellow colour and more or less handsomely embroidered in yellow silk. It is worn like Brian O'Linn's breeches "with the fleshy side out and the woolly side in." They cost about thirty or forty rupees, according to their embroidery.

² Text reads بتیل. Batil. In the text this word is followed by a (?) MS (A) has what may be پتل patal, in which case the meaning would be "a mat," and this in consideration of the matted condition of a filthy postin seems the true reading.

³ MS. (B) omits باشد.

band lampooning Sālū,¹ and inasmuch as the Emperor had the daughter of Shāh Muḥammad Sālū² in his service, he made an exception³ in his favour alone, and erased the names of all the members of his family, male and female, consigning them to ignominy. Inasmuch as Humāyūn was also incensed against that ass⁴ who had been the source of all this mischief, he had that lampoon read⁵ in Sālū's presence by the Mulla in full assembly, and evinced the greatest delight and merriment, and made him give a large sum as a reward. By degrees that lampoon became more and more disgracefully scurrilous, accordingly I have restricted myself to citing one extract from it in this place, which is as follows :—

“I am the poet of Shāh Humāyūn and the dust of his threshold, 478.

The retinue of my poetic worth casts the moon's brightness into shade.

My poem is the Emperor, and my noble verses are his cavalry and soldiery,

I experienced oppression from a fool,⁶ without any fault or crime of mine.

If my meditations turn towards⁷ satirizing him,

The object is that that these idiotic asses

May have a regard for the honour and dignity of this class.

Alas, for that man who contends with the tribe of poets,

Whoever contends with me contends against calamity.”

The Emperor interfered at this verse saying, “Why do you not word it thus :

“Whoever contends with me contends with God ”

Was mah i nau tāza harfe darmiyān āwarda and 2 بسته زنگ Basta zang. The dāk-runners in the East carry a cluster of globular bells called Zang or rang, tied to one end of the staff carried over their shoulders, to the other end of which the mail-bag is attached, as a signal to clear the way. Zang-bastan has the secondary meaning of acquiring importance. MSS. (A) (B) read زنگ for رنگ.

3 MS. (A) reads این بیت را که.

4 قباق بازی qabaq bāzi. Qabaq signifies in Türkī a gourd; in ancient times the Turkomāns used to hang up a wooden gourd as a mark for archery, but in later times a bowl was substituted for the gourd.

5 کجک kajak. The name given to the hook upon which the bowl is suspended in the game of qabaq andāzi. (Qhāṣṣu-l-lughāt.)

Bairām Khān has a well-known qaṣidah with this same rhyme, but in a different metre, of which the following is the opening couplet:—

Verse.

Thy shaft has carried away the loop of the *qabaq*¹ from its hook,

Thy meteor, by the help of the crescent-moon has erased the form of the Pleiades.

These two opening couplets are derived from the opening couplet of a qaṣidah by the celebrated Niṣāri Tūnī. The death of Mullā Jāhī took place in the year 956 H. and was due to some poison which a servant introduced into his cup.

481. Another poet is Ḥaidar Tūniā'i, a man of parts and unequalled in the technicalities of harmony, he had a competent faculty for both poetry and music. He spent the greater part of his life in Hindustān. The lampoon upon the *Maliku-l-munajjimīn*² of the time of Humāyūn Pādshāh, which he wrote at Panjgāh, is one of the marvels of the age, and a rarity for all time.

The following opening couplet which he wrote for his threnody on the death of the saintly martyred Imām,³ accepted of God, murdered by man, offspring of the Prophet, by descent from the pure⁴ Fāṭimah, upon them be peace,⁵ is read during the ʿAshūrā in the assemblies for the commemoration of the death of Husain.⁶

¹ The text reads كَبِك kabak and a footnote states that all three MSS. have the word written with kāf-i-kaliman (ك). MS (A) however has تَبِق qabaq. The crescent moon is compared to an erasing-knife (مِصْكَة).

² Prince of Astrologers.

³ Husain, the second son of 'Alī by his wife Fāṭimah, daughter of Muḥammad, was slain at Karbalā, A. H. 61. See Hughes' Dict. of Islām.

⁴ البَتُول Al-Batūl. The word batūl literally means an offset of a palm-tree, cut from the parent tree and independent of it. With the article al al, in its application to Fāṭimah, it denotes her distinction from other women on the ground of chastity, excellence and religion. See Lane s. v.

⁵ عليه السلام 'alaḥimas-salām. MS. (A) The text reads عليه السلام, with a footnote variant رضى الله عنه, and stating that the expression in the text is not found either in the dual or plural in any MS. Clearly the editor had not MS. (A) before him.

⁶ معارك m'adrik lit., battle fields.

Verse.

The month of Muḥarram has come and our eyes are constrained to weep,
We let fall tears of blood at the thought of Ḥusain's parched lips.¹

Rubā'ī.

Thou art he whom in envy they call the sun and moon,
Thy troops, both horse and foot, they call the moonfaced ones.
Thou art worthy of this, with this grace and beauty of thine,
That all the kings of the age should call thee sovereign lord.

The following is also by him :—

My heart thou hast no friend to compare with sorrow for him,
Thou hast no comfort in life like sympathy for him.

And this :—

Every moment my heart's desire has some fresh allurements,
To bear her coquetry costs my life, what of that ? it is her life.

How can I liken the lips of my love to the bud of the rose,
The bud is tightly pursed it is true, but is dumb and silent.

The son of this man Ḥaidar Tūnī was an arrant coward and spiritless ;² accordingly in the months³ of the year 985 H. he had entered the service of Humāyūn ; one day he was describing the circumstances of a journey by boat and its terrors, in such a way that the effects of fear were evident from his behaviour.⁴ I asked saying, May be you regret having gone on the Hajj ?⁵ and I repeated as appropriate to the occasion that verse which his rivals said to the poet Qudsi.⁶ 482.

⁶ Mir Ḥusain Qūdī of Karbalā, see Ain-i-Akbarī (B) I. 602.

Verse.

From the hardships of the desert path, and its thorns, ¹

Of the coming to the Ka'bah you are probably repentant.

He replied instantly, "Yea! verily." The king said, why should he repent of having visited the Ka'bah, though he may indeed repent of sitting in a ship. At that same moment Mathin ² Khān, the elegant and accomplished mime, in accordance with a hint from the king, made himself up ³ to represent a mad man bitten by a dog, and began to bark like a dog, and seized Ḥaidar, ⁴ and dragged him forward with his turban flying one way and his shoes another. He began running in all directions, ⁵ till at last he rolled on the ground, and set them all laughing immoderately. When he learned the truth he was desperately ashamed. The king attempted to console him, but it ended by his being obliged to leave Hindustān. Another is Shāh Tāhir Khwāndī ⁶ Dakkani, the younger brother of Shāh Ja'far; the 'Ulamā of 'Irāq, however ridicule his pretensions to descent from Khwāndī stock, and have prepared a document bearing upon this question, to which both his opponents and supporters subscribed their signatures, ⁷ as is mentioned in the Kāmilu-t-tawārīkh of Ibn Aḡīr Jazārī, ⁸ and also in the Lubbu-t-tawārīkh ⁹ of Qāzī Yahya Qazwīnī, and other works. He claimed to be intimately connected with Shāh Tahmasp, but ⁸ The author of this celebrated history which is also called Al-Kāmil fi-t-tārīkh (the perfect history) or more commonly Al-Kāmil, was Shaiḫ Abū-l-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Abī-l-Karīm Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abdu-l-Karīm ibn 'Abdu-l-Wahīd ash-Sharbhānī commonly known as Ibnul-Aḡīr.

He is called Al-Jazārī (the islander) from his birth-place the island of Ibn 'Umar, Jazīrat ibn 'Umar, an island of the Tigris above Mosul. He was born 555 H. (1160 A.D.) and died 630 H. (1232 A.D.). See Elliot and Dowson, II. 244, and Hājī Khalīfah, 9733.

⁹ لب التواریخ Lubbu-t-Tawārīkh. (Marrow of History). The author of this work was Yahya ibn 'Abdu-l-Laṭīf Qazwīnī (Dimishqī) who died 900 A.H. (1552 A.D.). See Elliot and Dowson IV. 293 and Hājī Khalīfah, 11076.

eventually he was led, by the abuse which was heaped upon him in connection with the aforesaid claim to relationship,¹ and the excessive annoyance caused him by Mir Jamālu-d-Dīn Ṣadr Astarābādī, to proceed to the Dakkan, which is famed as the refuge for the oppressed, where he met with a favourable reception from Nizām Shāh, the ruler of that country, and was rewarded with considerable advancement, and attaining the highest dignities² reached the rank of Jumlatu-l-Mulk (Chief finance-minister of the State). The Shī'ah tenets spread widely, in fact we may say they were really inaugurated in those regions through the instrumentality of Shāh Tāhir.³ Nizām Shāh Bahri, who was afflicted with an incurable⁴ malady of long standing, was cured by the virtue⁵ of a charm pronounced over him by Shāh Ja'far, and that occurrence, which was in reality was of the nature of Istidrāj, he attributed to the miraculous powers (karāmāt) of Shāh Ja'far,⁶ and acting upon his instigation abandoned the religious

² MSS. (A) (B) ومشير ومشار اليه گردیده

³ Shāh Tāhir, by prophesying the recovery of his son 'Abdu-l-Qādir, who was dangerously ill, induced Nizām Shāh to reject the names of Abū Bakr, 'Umar, and 'Uṣmān, who are the three first Khalīfahs of the Sunnis, from the Khuṭbah, and to substitute those of the Imāms, thus proclaiming himself a Shī'ah. See Firishta, Bo. text, II. 220 et. seqq. Briggs, (III. £28) merely mentions the fact but does not give the story.

⁴ Read لا علاج له. MS. (A).

⁵ بطفيل فسون خواني. Baṭufail-i-fusūn khvānī. This is a very strange expression, and although it occurs in the text and MSS. (A) (B), I would suggest we should read بفضل ba-faḍl. The use of spells and charms for the cure of disease was permitted to Muslims provided there was in them no suspicion of shirk, that is, of associating anything with God. We read in the Mishkāt that spells were permitted to be used "to counteract the ill-effects of a malignant eye; and on those bit by snakes or scorpions, and for sores in the side." They were also directed to be used for jaundice which was held to be an effect of the evil-eye. See Mishkāt-u-l-Maṣābiḥ, XXI. Part II.

MS. (B) reads صحتی می دارد

⁶ استدراج. Istidrāj. In the Kashshāf this is defined as follows: "A preternatural occurrence brought about by the agency of an unbeliever or an impious man, and in conformity with his desires." Another definition is also given from the Shamā'il-u-l-Muḥammadiyah. "Istidrāj is a preternatural occur-tenets of *Sunnat*¹ and Jamā'at,² which he held as one of the Mahdawīyah,³ and became a fanatical heretic,⁴ What cruel and vexatious treatment as accursed and excommunicate did not these two ill-starred ones⁵ inflict upon the 'Ulamā and Shaikhs of that land ! So that at last their disgraceful conduct led to the expulsion of the true Muslims, and heresy⁶ from that day again became firmly rooted in that country.

Shāh Tāhir was in natural descriptive poetry comparable to Nizām Astarābādī in astronomical poetry. The following is from one of his qaṣīdahs written in eulogy of Humāyūn Pādshāh. In it he has imitated Anwari.

Verse.

When the golden litter of the sun enters the resting-place of Hamal,⁷
The tulip lights its lamp, and the narcissus its torch ;

rence brought about by the agency of infidels or evil-doers." It is generally understood that a miracle brought about by one who claims to be a prophet, if it be in accordance with his desires is called mu'jiza, while if it be contrary to his intention it is called ihānat. Again that which is brought about by any other than a prophet, if he be faithful, pious, and perfect in the knowledge of God, is called karāmat; that performed by the ordinary believer is called ma'ūnat, but that which is performed by infidels is to be called istidrāj.

Kashf I. 463.

¹ The word سنة Sunnat means literally 'a path' and the Sunnis are known as اهل سنة Ahl-i-Sunnat "the people of the path." The Sunnis have claimed for themselves this title in virtue of their acknowledging the first four Khalifahs to have been the rightful successors of Muḥammad, and receiving the "six books" of tradition.

² جماعة jamā'at, Assembly. It is here used in its technical sense of سنة موكدة sunnatun mu'akkadatun an authenticated traditional practice. The Sunnis are commonly called Ahl-i-sunnah wa jamā'ah.

³ For an account of the Mahdawi sect, see Āin-i-Akbari (B.) I., pp. iii. iv.

⁴ متروك غالي mutaraff-i-ghālī. The meaning appears to be "became more of a Shī'ah than the Shī'ahs themselves." The form of the word mutaraffi requires some such translation.

⁵ مشموم mash'm MSS. (A) (B) read ميشوم.

⁶ فرض Rafz lit. forsaking. The Sunnī Muslims call all Shī'ahs Rāfiẓi or heretics.

⁷ حمل Hamal, Aries. The sun enters Aries in Spring.

Now the mountain is freed from the headache caused by Bahman and Dai,¹

And the spring cloud washes from its forehead the sandal.²

The following Qasidah in praise of the Prophet³ is also his, although the guriz-gah,⁴ nay even the commencement of the Qasidah in its entirety, is not suitable to the dignity of the holy Commander (of the Faithful) on him be peace.⁵ 484.

Qasidah.

Once more the time has come when in accordance with the summons of the sky

The rose spreads its crimson blanket on the couch of the garden;

The clouds of Naisān, with the keen blood-hued dagger of the lightning

Erases the word "ice"⁶ from the pages of the earth's surface.

The close-eyed darlings the buds, like an army of Ozbaks,⁷

Make a night-attack at early dawn upon the army of Dai,

Behold the forms of bud and of rose with the sky for a branch!

The conical shadow of the earth is the bud, the sun in heaven is the rose.

¹ بهمن و دی Bahman-o-Dai. Dai is the tenth and Bahman the eleventh month of the Persian year: they answer to December and January. See Al-Birūnī Chronology, p. 52.

² مندل Sandal. Santalum album, N. O. Santalacæ.

The wood ground into powder is much used in India made into a paste with water as an application to the forehead in headaches. The Makhsuṣāt-l-Adwiyā recommends the addition of a little camphor and rose-water. See Ibn Baīṭar II, 138. See ante, p. 434 n. 1, also Drury, Useful Plants of India, p. 383.

³ منقبت Manqabat. This word is used to connote eulogy of either the Prophet or holy men (Walis).

⁴ گریزگاه Guriz-gah. Point of departure. This name is given to that portion of a qasidah in which the poet leaves his original theme to descant upon the qualities of the person eulogised.

⁵ MS. (A) omits تعالى - and عليه السلام - also حضرت.

⁶ Text حرف برز ḥarf-i-barz. MS. (B) reads حرف حرف ḥarf-i-ḥarf.

⁷ The Turks are called tang-chaghm close-eyed, and the red petals tightly folded in the bud are likened to the "tāj" or red caps of the Qizilbāsh.

And for this reason that the assembly of the rose may not be without a minstrel,
 The nightingale has become the lute-player, the rose-branch with its buds are the lute;
 The garment of the rock would have become wet from the moisture distilled from the clouds
 Had not the mountain covered its back with the woollen cloak¹ of verdure.
 Had not the lightning smitten its goad upon the head of the elephant-like cloud
 It would have laid in ruins the stately edifice of the sky.
 The garden became the table of 'Isā, and the dew lying on it²
 Looked like salt sprinkled here and there upon that table,
 In order that the people may not receive base gold from the hand of the jasmine,
 The tulip cambist carries hidden under his arm the touchstone.
 Every perfect thing which is not secure from the defects of decay,
 Seems in the sight of the wise and noble but a small thing.
 The beloved of the garden is of perfect beauty but it had been well
 If this beauty and comeliness had not been separated from it.
 Alas! for that moment when at the instigation of desire the army of Dai
 Became emboldened³ to lay waste the garden of roses.
 The time is near at hand when the staff-bearer of the days of Autumn
 Will knock with his staff at the gate of the rose-garden.
 The crow will then hold in derision the impassioned⁴ nightingale,
 And the withered petals will lie blackened beneath the hundred petalled rose (the sun).

² Read و بروی شبنم MSS. (A) (B).

³ Text reads شیرک but we should read سترک. MS. (A).

⁴ MS. (A) reads شوریدة for شوریدة.

The wind has cast the diadem from the head of the garden glory,¹

While the Siparak² sets itself up in antagonism to the cheek of the rose.

With a view to the construction of that courtyard of which Dai³ has laid the foundation in the garden,

Everywhere there lie scattered about bricks of ice and mortar of snow,

[For aged people who have experienced the tyranny of Autumn

The optician Dai makes spectacles of the crystal ice.

[Soon will it happen that from fear of the staff of the watchman of Dai

The people of the sweet herbs will take to flight one after another].⁴

It is better for the wise man that he determine to make the tour of such a garden

Where the autumn cannot be persuaded to go even by force.

That garden is the rose-garden of the praise of a king of so high dignity

That the very angels descend from heaven to frequent his Court.

² سپرک Siprak a herb, which when boiled dyes yellow (Steingass). This line may also be translated, Measles has become opponent to the cheek of the rose.

³ MS. (A) reads دی گل for دی.

⁴ This couplet is in MS. (A), as follows.—

زود باشد که از بیم کتک شعله دی
گرونده رعایای ریاحین یک یک

The text reads زود باشد instead of پیدش از اندم.

⁵ مرتضی Murtaẓa. The Chosen. A title of 'Alī.

Breaks the wing of the heavenly Eagle¹ as though it were a duck.

Such a king is he that, in the train of the attendants at his door, Birjis² bears the name Sa'd, and 'Utārid³ that of Zīrak.

The table-steward of the sky, for the use of his lordly table,
Has brought the Pleiades⁴ in his hand as salt-cellar and salt.
The moon has become the censer of his⁵ assembly, and the rays of the moon,⁶

Are the smoke of the aloes-wood which issues from that censer,

From behind the mirror of the heavens, in accordance with the rules of approval,

Whatever he said, Fate repeated the same like a parrot.⁷

¹ نسرین فلک. Nasrain-i-falak. The constellations Eagle and Lyre.

² برجیس. Birjis. The planet Jupiter, which is one of the سعدان Sa'dān, or two auspicious planets, the other being Venus.

³ عطارد. 'Utārid. The planet Mercury, which is held to rule over intelligence, hence it has the name زیرک Zīrak, intelligent.

The names Sa'd and Zīrak are commonly given to servants.

⁴ ثریا Šuraiyyā. The Pleiades; as being the most beneficial of the planets from its influence on the autumnal rains, is called by the Arabs النجم An-najm. The constellation, cf. Job. xxxviii. 31. The poet apparently draws his simile from the form of the constellation itself, and also from the nebula, which he compares to the salt grains. If this latter is really the case it would be interesting, as the nebula of the Pleiades is claimed to have been comparatively recently discovered, first by photography.

⁵ MS. (A) reads روی ruy.

⁶ The expression جرم قمر jirm-i-qamar is not very clear, and properly would hardly bear the meaning given to it in the translation. The word جرم jirm is said to be used in the sense of the separate members of the body (see Lane s. v.) and on this analogy the word is here translated rays.

⁷ The text has here a footnote saying that in two MSS. there follows here In maṭla'ī ā nīz maṣḥūr ast. So MS. (B).

⁸ To look each morning upon the turquoise is said to enhance the brilliancy of the eyes. It is also said that the wearer of a Turquoise so set that it

Virtual justice and the decree of courts are mistakes,
For this reason that this question was decided in the case of Faddak¹

The widow of time, since she was not meet for marriage,
He divorced her openly and irrevocably, then he left her.]²

The following opening couplet of his³ is also well-known :— 487.

Verse.

In this grief-populated world joy has departed from my sorrowful heart,⁴

We are quite accustomed to grief to such an extent has joy been forgotten.

Verse.

We have been defamed because of the crime of love, as the devotee is blamed for his hypocrisy;

Both of us are defamed, but what a vast difference there is between us?

The following is also his :—

Verse.

Come not out, for you will be the calamity⁵ of the age,
We shall be slain and you will be disgraced.

The following qasidah also⁶ is a very happy production of his :—

Every man who sets his heart upon worldly desires

In the judgment of men of wisdom is not wise;

touches the skin may fall from any height without injury, as the stone attracts to itself the whole force of the blow. Mani Mâlâ I., p. 88. It is also supposed to change colour with the state of the wearer's health. The Turquoise is commonly worn set in an amulet.

¹ Faddak was a village which belonged to the prophet Muhammad. After his death, when his daughter Fa'imah had assumed possession, the Khalifah took it from her by force, saying, "I have heard the prophet say 'we prophets will not leave legacies to our heirs but what is left at our death will be given in charity.'"

² The verses in brackets are omitted from MS. (A).

³ MS. (A) omits او.

⁴ Text reads در غم آباد جهان عیش تو دل ناشاد رفت. MSS. (A) (B) read در غم او لذت عشق از دل ناشاد رفت. In grief for her the joy of love has left my sorrowful heart.

⁵ MSS. (A) (B) read فتنة for شهرة. ⁶ Insert نیز از after قصیده. MS. (A).

His death occurred in the year 952 H. in the Dakkan and for the tārīkh of his decease the words *Tābi'u ahl-i-l-bait*¹ were devised.

Another is *Khawāja Aiyūb*² ibn *Khawāja Abū-l-barakāt*³, who was one of the hereditary grandees of Mawarā-an-nahr. Both father and son, in spite of their excellencies acquired⁴ and inherited, have become proverbial for indifference, the one in 'Irāq and Khurāsān, and the other in Kābul and Hindustān. This Muntakhab has no room to relate their circumstances in detail, but they are related in many other places, and are well-known. It is said that *Khawāja Abū-l-barakāt*⁵ read the following *maṭla'*⁶ of one of his own poems on the learned men of the age.⁷

Verse.

The field of my hope became parched, and a famine of faithfulness followed.⁸

488.

Either this was from the fire of our heart, or that in the cloud of our eye there remained no rain.

By way of fault-finding some one said to him that the yā (يا) in the last hemistich was meaningless, and in its place he should have written tā (تا). The Khawāja repeated the following qit'ah extempore by way of excuse :

Qit'ah.

Whatever comes before men of discrimination,
They do not draw lines by way of criticism.
They take the dots either above or below (as may be required)
Wise men are not bound by simple dots.
They read yā (يا) and carefully consider,
They do not read yā (يا) but make it tā (تا) in error.⁹

⁴ MS. (B) reads مكتسبي for مكتسبي. ⁵ MS. (A) again reads ابو البركة.

⁸ MS. (A) reads شد كشت امید ما و شد قحط وفا.

⁹ There is great cleverness of construction in the original qit'ah, in the last line we should read بکنند bi-kunand for نکنند na kunand, and in the last but two پیرو پیرو. MS. (A).

He also wrote a qaṣīdah in imitation of Salmān Sāwajī,¹ of which the following is the opening couplet:—

Verse.

I burn with the fever of love, and my head is racked with the pain of separation,

My soul comes to my lips, but my beloved comes not to me;

[Since the fire of my heart burns in my body like the flame in a lamp

My skirt has been rent and my garment torn upon my head].²

And the following two poems are taken from a qaṣīdah which he wrote to satirise the Qāzī of Nishāpūr:—

Verses.

A certain theologian wrote contrary to the religious law of the Prophet,³

There was nothing of that kind written in the books.

He wrote that honey is unlawful and wine lawful to be used because (said he) the latter is the juice of the vine and the former the spume of the bee.

To the wife who went⁴ to complain of her husband to the 489.

Qāzī, saying I get no enjoyment of sense from him,

He replied, If he has become enfeebled and weak,

It is right that he should employ a hireling in his place.

The Khwāja in his poems sometimes uses the takhaltuṣ,⁵ of Ayūb and sometimes that of Firāqī; the following ghazal is by him:—

Verse.

Lovely rose-branch, whose stature is straight as the cypress,
Thou hast twined a line of emerald around thy lips,

The last lines also mean—

Either they read and consider carefully

Or they do not read lest they should make mistakes.

¹ Salmān Sāwajī, whose surname was Jalāl-u-d-dīn Muḥammad, was a celebrated poet, a native of Sāwa, and flourished in the reigns of Shāikh Hasan Jalāyer and his son Sulṭān Aweis. He died 779 A. H. (Beale, O. B. D.)

² Not in MS. (B).

³ MSS. (A) (B) پندجو.

⁴ MSS. (A) (B) read رفت for برد.

And thine eyebrows are extended like the madda over the Alif.¹

Thou hast cast the die of acceptance on the words of others,
But through the words of lovers thou has drawn the line of refusal;

Thou endurest troubles, do not attempt to draw her, O painter of Chin, Wert thou to draw a hundred, never would there come eyes and locks like her's.

Firāqī, be not over-desirous of the wealth of union with her,
Thou hast suffered boundless tyranny and spite at the hands of thy beloved.²

The king, who has now taken refuge in God's pardon, in spite of that unseemly behaviour was excessively fond of the Khwājah.

Accordingly, so³ desirous was he of his society that he joined him in the marriage-bond to one of the Begams, in the hope⁴ that he would adopt the manner of life of people of probity and rectitude, but the Khwājah was held so close a prisoner⁵ by his evil habits, that he could not abide companionship with the king.

Verse.

When once evil habits have taken possession of the nature
They will never leave it till the day of death.

490. He put forward various flimsy pretexts to that end, and not even contenting himself with this, one day while in the king's assembly he was guilty of a breach of decorum which one blushes to mention. The king, out of the exceeding kindness and goodness of his nature, overlooked his fault, and merely remarked, "My dear Khwāja what sort of manners are these!" The Khwāja sought permission to proceed to Makka the revered, the blessed,⁶ and after duly setting in order the requisites for his journey and the requirements for a sea-voyage,¹ he bade him farewell. When he embarked he enquired of his companions, what² are the advantages of going thither? They replied, "Purification from past sins." He rejoined, "I will wait then till I have fulfilled the catalogue of sins, and then be purified, so that I may have no further desire to sin."³ Thus he remained destitute of that grace, and abandoning himself to his desires, gave the rein to his passions. Sultān Bahādur of Gujrāt in consideration of pleasant companionship and good-fellowship, appointed⁴ him a daily allowance of one *ashrafī*⁵ for his expenditure. One day when he was passing through the bāzār of Aḥmadābād, seeing the Khwāja in the Tirpauliya mosque,⁶ he reined back and with great kindness and empressement asked "How is the Khwāja faring?" He replied "On the fare which you have allotted me, one of my limbs even cannot obtain sufficient sustenance, why do you ask such a question?" Sultān Bahādur notwithstanding this rudeness doubled his allowance.⁷

Just at that time too Shāh Tāhir Dakkani came to Gujrāt with all pomp and circumstance on the occasion of his embassy from Nizām Shāh Dakkani, and having heard such high praise of the Khwāja, arrived at his house, which had neither a mat nor a pitcher of water. A very pleasant colloquy followed, each reciting his own and hearing the other's verses, and on the next ¹ سز جهاز MS. (A). The text reads مسفر جهاز and adds a footnote saying that this is the reading of all three MSS. and also suggests that we should perhaps read مسفر جهاز. MS. (A.) is however evidently correct here.

² MS. (A) reads چه چیز است.

³ Read here تا ارضانی نماند MS. (A.), instead of the reading in the text تا از بدقی نماند.

⁴ MS. (A) فرمود.

⁵ The Ashrafī is a gold coin weighing ten māshas, which first obtained currency in the reign of Ashraf Pādshāh (Ġhiāzu-l-lughāt).

⁶ MS. (A) reads مسجد بازو for مسجد. The word tirpauliya is a Sanskrit word, meaning having three doors. It does not appear which mosque is meant, but Hunter in the Gazetteer of India. Vol. I, pp. 97-98, speaking of the architecture of Aḥmadābād, points out the compromise of form between Hindu or Jain, and Muhammadan types. He says "Even the mosques are Hindu or Jain in their details, with a Saracenic arch thrown in occasionally, not from any constructive want, but as a symbol of Islām."

491. day, after arranging all the requirements of hospitality, with a khil'at, a horse, and a bag of coin and valuable gifts in his own lodging, sent the Khwāja an invitation. In the warmth of their meeting and the enthusiasm of their conversation, suddenly the conversation turned upon¹ religion and sects. The Khwāja enquired of the Shāh, what is the reason that the Shi'ahs among you say such unbecoming things regarding the companions of the Prophet on him be peace? He answered 'Our jurisconsults² have decided that cursing (la'n) is an element of faith (Imān).'³ The Khwāja rejoined, 'Curses on a faith of which cursing is an element.'⁴ The Shāh was astounded at this, and their colloquy came to an end, and that urbanity and courtesy which he had thought to shew remained hidden by the curtain of his anger, and was lost. Finally he departed thence in wretchedness and ignominy to the Dakkan, and had an interview⁵ with Nizām Shāh, who likewise sent all that was necessary to his honourable reception, and received him cordially, but neither there could the Khwāja remain, owing⁶ to his perverse temper and his want of self-restraint, till by leaving the world he freed himself from the torment of existence.

Verse.

My heart, be patient for that stern-hearted friend,
Is sitting and grieving sore⁶ at his own unhappy fate.

Verse.

Where was the black horse? whither did I wend?

Who am I, and what words are these? but what can I do, for the rein of my restive, hasty⁶ and audacious pen has been turned in this direction, and words have leapt forth beyond the area of my control. Were it not so, I know that it is no virtue to pry into faults, while to carp at the vices of others, shutting one's eyes to one's own defects is the acme of shortsightedness.

Verse.

The wicked sees all the vices of others,
From the pitcher that distils which it contains.¹

God He is glorified and exalted, preserves all of us from that which is wrong and improper, and as at this time² the writer has not with him a selection from the anthologies of the eloquent and learned poets, accordingly he has found it necessary to restrict himself³ to the brief mention of these few poets by way of an example.

Should this inconstant and transitory life give a few days respite, and should the days, in opposition to their usual habit afford assistance, and should Fate give its help, he will make mention of the poets of former times, and the contemporary poets of Hindūstān, especially of those whom he has seen or heard and appreciated in his own lifetime, together with extracts from their poems included in their biographies.

Mine is the endeavour, its perfection is from God.⁴ Should this not come to pass, this much will suffice as a memorial of the author.

Qitā'h.

If I remain in life, I will repair
The garment which exile has rent ;
If I should die,⁵ accept this my excuse,
Many are the hopes which crumble into dust.
